ANTIQUES

PURCHASE GUARANTEED GENUINE ANTIQUE FURNITURE AT LESS THAN NEW FROM

THE Old-World Galleries

EXHIBITIONS NOW BEING HELD AT THEIR GALLERIES AT 71 & 73, DUKE STREET, GROSVENOR SQ. (50 yds. from SELFRIDGES).
46, KNIGHTSBRIDGE (200 yds. Hyde Park Corner; four minutes HARRODS),
18A, QUEEN'S ROAD, Bayswater (opposite Tube; two minutes WHITELEY'S),
THE ELIZABETHAN HOUSE, THE BRIDGE, HENLEY-ON-THAMES.
YOU ARE MOST CORDIALLY INVITED. ADMISSION FREE.

VISITORS ARE NOT ASKED NOR EXPECTED TO BUY.

DO NOT PAY EXORBITANT PRICES FOR ANTIQUE FURNITURE AND THEN PERHAPS FIND THEY ARE NOT ALL GENUINE. IF YOU PURCHASE A PIECE OF OLD FURNITURE AT LESS THAN YOU WOULD PAY FOR A SIMILAR NEW PIECE, YOU MAY BE SURE YOU HAVE A BARGAIN.

EVERY PIECE SOLD BY THE OLD-WORLD GALLERIES, LTD., IS ABSOLUTELY GUARANTEED TO BE AS DESCRIBED.

The Old-World Galleries further undertake with every piece to return your money in full, if ever they make an error in the description of any piece sold. Should this ever happen, they would not only do so, but they would be most anxious that the piece was returned and the money refunded.

IT IS THE GREATEST ERROR TO THINK THAT IF YOU PAY A BIG PRICE YOU ARE SURE TO GET A GENUINE ANTIQUE! IT IS FAR MORE LIKELY TO BE THE REVERSE,

BECAUSE WITH EXPENSIVE PIECES IT PAYS THE BEST "FAKERS" TO SPEND INFINITE PAINS, AND TO SUCH AN ART HAS THIS BECOME THAT PIECES THUS FAKED DECEIVE DEALERS, EXPERTS AND COLLECTORS—BUT—THIS FAKING COSTS A GREAT DEAL, AND IT IS ONLY WITH PIECES WORTH five to a hundred times that of a similar new piece that it pays to "fake."

THE OLD-WORLD GALLERIES, LTD.,
(1) SELL A REPLICA AS SUCH, (2) POINT OUT IF A PIECE IS PARTLY ANTIQUE AND PARTLY MADE UP, (3) POINT OUT WHERE A PIECE HAS BEEN REPAIRED.
IT IS THEIR OPINION THAT THEIR CLIENTS DO NOT OBJECT TO A FINE REPLICA, OR A PARTLY RESTORED PIECE PROVIDED THEY ARE HONESTLY TOLD BEFORE THEY PURCHASE.

WEEKLY PRICE LIST.

The First Essential

BY THE LADY WITH THE DUSTER

EVERY woman who Spring Cleans has her own favourite "cleaner."

With some it is a particular and patent brand of carpet soap, metal polish or furniture cream. With others it is the more homely and simple remedies for dirt and dust — beeswax and turpentine, soft soap and Bath brick.

Many of these "cleaners," patent and otherwise, are excellent, and yet they are, after all, only the "top dressing" of Spring Cleaning necessities. For there is a First Essential in successful cleaning of almost any kind.

What is the First Essential?

It is simply this—Hot Water.

Hot Water in sufficient quantities—Hot Water without stint—is worth all the soaps, polishes, creams and chemicals in the world.

And yet there are quite a number of unenterprising people who do not have any supply at all of the First Essential. On the very first morning of their Spring Cleaning the supply is out of commission owing to a visit from the sweep, which means that the kitchen range cannot be lighted, and there is consequently no hot water at all. And when the fire is going again there may or may not be hot water in plenty according to whether or not the range happens to be a good one, and the cook a person who can and will manage it. And even with the best management and the best will in the world a constant supply cannot be relied upon with antiquated methods.

Hot Water—the First Essential—is assured, day or night, week in, week out, to those who use Gas Water-Heaters.

And while Spring Cleaning itself is made altogether an easier matter by a good supply of hot water, that is not all. For how delightful it is to feel that at the end of a long and tiring day there is the absolute certainty of the hot bath which is so necessary to those who would enjoy an evening's rest after the day's work is over.

Annuals

THE value of these charming flowers has of late years been more fully realised, and to-day no garden can afford to be without them.

Their wonderful range of colour and form, length of flowering period and easy culture, render them worthy of consideration to all interested in the development of freshness, variety and richness of colour in the Flower Garden.

Many will recall the wonderful Gold Medal Exhibit of Annuals staged by Messrs. Sutton at the R.H.S. Meeting of August 9th last (embracing 160 varieties), and also that of August 24th, 1920 (also awarded a Gold Medal).

Full particulars of the best varieties will be found in Sutton's Garden Seed Catalogue for 1923. Free.

MONEY

MESSRS. HARDENS submit their nightly report as follows:

The outlook on the Continental political situation caused by the Franco-German economic struggle, the demands of the Turkish "Conquerors," and the possible eruption of Bolshevik activity in the spring, has caused markets to become comparatively quiet after the recent activity. If the first two problems can be arranged then the world will have less scope for trouble, and it is probable that there would be activity of a less speculative nature.

Shares are in supply when markets are dull and in demand during active periods. If investors would realise they should buy when such opportunities occur and sell readily to the demands of a rising market there would be fewer bank balances damaged by speculative operations. Human nature over money matters is very frail, and there must be a buyer for every seller.

GENERAL.—Even if the French exchange goes to 100 as predicted by some people then the French Rentes 4 per cent.'s at 20 would yield 5 per cent. and still have holding secured on the revenue of a great nation.

The bell-wether of the foreign market seems to be Turkish Unified 4 per cent. Bonds, and it is worth remembering that 3 per cent. was paid last autumn, thus giving a yield at 23 of over 12 per cent.

Southern Railway Deferred still looks cheap at 30.

The payment of the full dividend on the 5 per cent. Cumulative Preference of the London and Suburban Traction against 3½ per cent. last year and allowing for the arrears, 19 per cent., still unpaid, makes the shares cheap to put away at 11/9 cumulative dividend.

If internal conditions in this country continue improving this year, then Associated Portland Cement Ordinary are not over valued and B.S.A.'s rather cheap.

Tea Companies shares are not widely known to investors, yet most show a very strong financial position. YATADERIA £1 shares at par are worth consideration. The issued capital is £140,007 in ordinary shares, whilst no bonus shares were given in bonus times. The Company has 1,069 acres under tea and 918 acres rubber; the acreage has been extended yearly by planting up since 1912. The total result shown in the last report, published in May, 1922, was £22,000, and though 1921 was not a good year for prices, the profit amounted to over £8,000. The estimate for 1922 is 500,000 lbs. of tea; the 1921 cost 5d. per lb. f.o.b., whilst the average price should prove about 1/- to 1/3, leaving a probable net profit of 7½d. per lb. More than one half of the rubber, estimated 230,000 lbs. (restricted), was sold forward to cover cost of production. Hence 7½ per cent. should be safely estimated for 1923. With brighter prospects for 1923, owing to the rubber and higher prices for tea, the shares are worth putting away at the price of 19/9–20/9.

Investors must not overlook the financial position of Rubber Companies if they are wanting dividends this year. If the "all in" costs show a drop appreciable to that of many other Ceylon Companies, then Ceylon Timber and Rubber should not prove over-valued now at 2/10½–3/–.

MINING.—There appears to be a rattling of bones in the Kaffir Market, and if it comes to anything, Anglo Americans, Brakpans and Village Deep are worthy of consideration.

Indian Gold Mining Shares appear to be worth picking up, but the omission of working costs in the monthly returns does not make for confidence in the shares.

OIL.—During the past week or so, interest is widening out in the Oil Market. Anglo-Persian new shares will prove to be cheap whilst only 3/– premium.

Information is accumulating steadily that Venezuela is a country with vast Oil resources. Development has largely been in American hands up to now, and it is curious that there are no moderately capitalised British Companies operating there so far. British Controlled has vast areas, but an enormous capital, whilst V.O.C. with over a million capital, being only a holding company, its prospects are "wropt" in mystery.

The OMNIUM OIL DEVELOPMENT CO. claims to have rights to deal with enormous areas in Venezuela, but if its titles are good to less than quarter of the acreage, then the Company is in a unique position.

Apparently, the areas are adjacent to those on which the Americans are operating successfully.

Recently, an announcement was made that the Company had obtained rights to an area of about 2 square miles to the south of the V.O.C. gusher.

The issued capital is, roughly, £100,000 in 5/– Shares and it is evident changes are taking place behind the scenes, because of the recent additions to the board of men thoroughly conversant with the Oil business.

So far, the Company has made no announcement of its policy and, doubtless, the public would become more interested if a reliable experienced British geologist were at work sorting out the good areas from the remainder.

If the Company disposes of concessions to operating Companies, or forms soundly financed subsidiaries, and obtains prices anything like those usually paid to vendors of Oil concessions, then the outlook for Omnium Oil Shareholders should be very bright. The Shares have been very steady for some weeks past on a basis of 4/– to 4/6.

THE SCHREIBER-WIMBORNE CHINA

THE Oriental porcelain which is being dispersed at Christie's on Tuesday, March 6th, and two following days, and is to be viewed on the Friday and Monday preceding, forms part of one of the finest private collections ever assembled in England. During twenty years and more its constitution occupied the great energy of a lady who, in her way, was among the most interesting characters of her age—Lady Charlotte Schreiber. That portion of her collection illustrating British ceramics was transferred by her to the Victoria and Albert Museum, where it now forms the bulk of its department. Her fans and fan paintings are, similarly, in the British Museum, together with her Battersea enamels. The large portion yet remaining to her Lady Charlotte bequeathed to her children, and is principally contained in the Countess of Bessborough's collection and Lord Wimborne's, which is following the place of its abode, Canford Manor, into the market.

Consisting very largely of Oriental porcelain, principally of Kang-He and Kien-Lung periods, and of the familles Rose and Verte description, there are, nevertheless, some very important pieces of tapestry, notably a set of four Flemish panels, of the Months, after Lucas, and two exquisite Beauvais panels 12ft. 8ins. by 20ft., probably designed for table covers, together with three Elizabethan tiger ware jugs silver mounted and marked respectively for 1579, 1580 (Exeter) and 1563. A dozen lots, moreover, consisting of European porcelain, largely complete services, and three pieces of Battersea enamel not included in the British Museum bequest, are also in the catalogue.

Lady Charlotte Bertie was born in 1812, only daughter of the ninth Earl of Lindsey by his second marriage at the age of sixty-five with the daughter of Dean Layard of Bristol. Leading a lonely youth she was a voracious reader, and taught herself French, German and Spanish, and studied Greek, Latin, Hebrew and Persian. In 1833 she married Sir John Guest, owner of the great ironworks at Merthyr Tydfil in Wales and, mastering double entry, proceeded to keep the accounts of the business, and also learnt Welsh and translated the "Mabinogion," which remains the most comprehensive and, with its occasional errors, the most faithful translation of Welsh mythology—inspiring directly, as it did, Tennyson's "Idylls of the King." For three years after her husband's death in 1852 she ran the iron works herself, and then married Mr. Charles Schrieber, eldest son of Colonel James Schreiber of Melton, Suffolk.

It was not till 1868 or 1869, however, that she began collecting, and not till well on in the seventies that she engaged in Oriental porcelain. In the "Notes Ceramic" of her journals, notes which, edited by one of her sons, run into two fat volumes, she confesses in 1870, "I am no judge of Oriental." She seems never, moreover, to have had the "blue and white" craze which was one of the paraphernalia of the "æsthetic movement," though, nevertheless, she was, with Bunthorne—are to be found at Christie's, though there is a fine triple-gourd shaped bottle (Lot 76) of the latter colour enamelled with panels, in famille verte.

> Such a judge of blue and white and other kinds of pottery
> From early Oriental down to modern terra-cotta-ry.

FIG. 3.—TWO OF THREE FAMILLE ROSE VASES, 17½INS. HIGH, WITH BLACK GROUND, AND A KYLIN, WITH A YOUNG ONE AT ITS FEET, 16½INS. HIGH. BOTH KIEN-LUNG.

It is as a collection of famille rose that this sale is outstanding. Fig. 3 shows two of a trio (Lot 33) of vases enamelled with flowers on a black ground, with panels of pæonies. In the same figure a singleton kylin (Lot 32) of the same period, 16½ins. high, with a young kylin at its feet, represents a class of ornaments of which many pairs are also to be sold. Another beautiful vase (Fig. 1, Lot 51) 36ins. high is remarkable for the brilliant colouring of the enamel on white ground. Lot 60, very similar in size and shape, is enamelled with panels of ladies and garden scenes on a flower-bestrewn dark blue ground. Perhaps the gem of the collection is shown in Fig. 2 (Lot 89): a pair of vases, still famille rose, brilliantly enamelled with cocks. These were probably acquired in 1872 in Seville from Mrs. Brackenbury, widow of the English Consul, for £25! Twenty-five inches high and of Yung Ching period they are magnificent specimens, and should find a high price. Lots 109 and 110, respectively a single and a pair of vases with flower designs on a black ground, were also acquired at Seville.

Lots 148 and 149 are two spherical ornaments pierced with honeycomb and diaper patterns and enamelled with flowers of Ming and Kien-Lung periods respectively, the characteristics of each period well contrasted. The use of these ornaments is obscure, but thought to have been to hold a flower in a bowl of water.

An interesting collection of Kien-Lung plates and bowls enamelled with European arms, portraits, etc., are presented, foremost among them a bowl with the Young Pretender, a Highlander and a bagpiper on the outside, while twelve plates with humorous (or symbolical) figures and Dutch inscriptions, though thought little of by Lady Charlotte, were considered very good by Mr. Schreiber, who found them in Brussels. Two of the figures refer to the bursting of John Law's "Bubbles," which had a great effect on Amsterdam.

XVI—XVIII CENTURY GUNS AND PISTOLS

WEDGWOOD AND FURNITURE.

IN his recent work, "European Hand Firearms of the XVI, XVII and XVIII Centuries," Mr. Herbert J. Jackson has given to the world the results of over forty years' study of the subject. During these years he steadily gathered together a superb collection of pieces (selected as representative specimens of the best quality and condition) of "the varying types used in Europe during the different periods." This collection is now to be dispersed at Messrs. Sotheby's on March 1st.

Two very prominent groups in the sale are the Brescian firearms and the English pistols of the eighteenth century, mostly of London origin, when the stocks were elaborately inlaid with silver wire and ornament, and silver masks were used as butt caps, while the barrels were generally cannon-shaped. There are interesting specimens of the early appearance of the revolver in England. One is a hand-revolved flint-lock pistol with seven barrels, made by Hunter in the early eighteenth century. With the side-bolt in, the uppermost and middle barrels fire together, the others separately. There is something of Italian grace and fluent line in the fine pair of English hand-revolving magazine flint-lock pistols which bear the inscription "Gorgo at London" under the lock plate. They fire three shots from one barrel; the barrel screws over the breech-block, which contains three chambers, each having a separate touch-hole, and all are fired by a common lock, steel and pan. It is revolved by an upward pressure on the trigger guard.

In the group of Brescian pistols there is not only extreme beauty of shape but profusion of ornament, combined with magnificent workmanship. One very rich pair, formerly in the Kennedy collection, bears the mark "Pietro, Florentino," on the locks, and on the barrels "Lazarino Cominazzo" but the eye dwells upon the bold and beautiful workmanship and design of their locks and mountings showing curving stems and spiral with foliage, flowers, figures and cherubs, more than their makers names or their practical utility. To my mind the outstanding object in the collection is the Brescian sporting gun by Lazarino Cominazzo. This piece, considered to be unique, is a marvel in the perfection of its design and the boldness of its chiselling, especially in the lock, which is on the snaphaunce principle. The barrel is 33ins. long, and from being octagonal at the breech takes a faceted form and then becomes circular. The stem of the steel is shaped like a strong shoot of acanthus pressing upwards; the outer surface of the lock is worked with masks and scrolls of ornament, in which are a lion, a sea-horse, a serpent and human figures. All the furnishings are beautifully chased and pierced, while the stock, of walnut, is carved with similar ornament and figures.

Then there is the unique Spanish sporting gun of the early part of the eighteenth century. Before this gun was found the detonating lock was believed to be due to the invention by Forsyth in 1807. Great interest attaches to the ivory powder-horn carved with hunting scenes, from the North collection; to the wonderful circular powder flask of pearwood with hollow centre, carved with boar and hounds; and to the armour and weapons.

In the course of the seventeenth century the art of the potter in England was greatly developed, and new designs and methods from foreign sources became established. This led up to the great age of experiment in the eighteenth century, and was stimulated by the setting up of porcelain manufactories. Perhaps in sympathy with the wish to procure porcelain, pottery became much finer than before, and in one or two forms closely approached to porcelain. The moving spirit, the master-worker in this search after improvement in material, was Josiah Wedgwood.

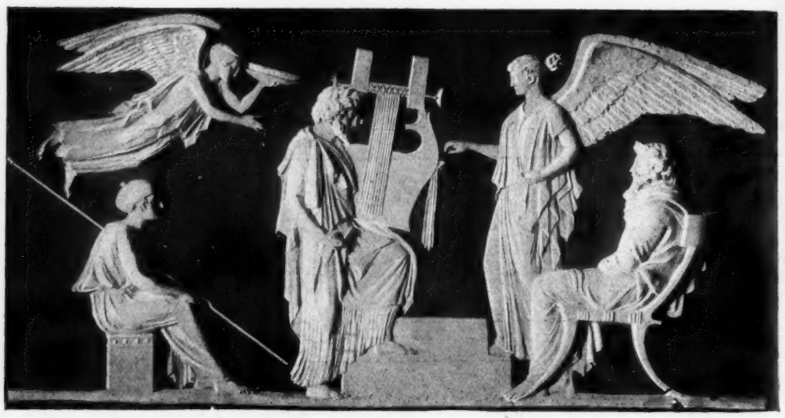
Untiring at experiments, he invented a rich green glaze when in partnership with Whieldon, perfected the cream or Queen's ware, and the same with the black "basaltes" ware, red ware and fine stoneware or semi-porcelain; but the most individual, most brilliant and most successful of his achievements was the production of jasper ware. It was new and distinctive and was made about 1775, a white body used for objects of light utility as well as for ornament. The relief parts of the design are generally white, the backgrounds blue, pink, lilac, sage and olive greens, black and. rarely, yellow. Sometimes two colours in addition to white occur on the minute ornamental objects modelled with exquisite delicacy. The large series of oval portrait medallions modelled by sculptors, such as Hackwood and Flaxman, in high relief are of the highest historical importance. The cameo-decoration was employed for vases, and after years of experiment a successful copy of the Portland vase was produced. In 1786 the "Pegasus" vase was presented to the British Museum by Wedgwood. The subject of its frieze is "The Crowning of a Citharist," which Flaxman modelled from a Greek vase in the same museum.

"The Crowning of a Citharist," or "The Victorious Citharist," as it is called, was also the subject of plaques. We illustrate, by courtesy of Messrs. Stoner and Evans, a very large specimen in their collection. It measures 1ft. 2½ins. by 7½ins., and shows the victor in the centre, Athene seated on the left, the judge on the right, and two nikai.

The jasper-ware cameo decorations of Wedgwood have been criticised as copies, wanting in originality, and as pandering to the pseudo-classic art of the period. But what is more in keeping with the spirit of the works of Robert Adam?—and, after all, interior decoration is part of the architecture. With Adam interiors these cameo plaques are in entire sympathy.

Porcelain, objects of art and Oriental rugs, from various owners, will come under the hammer at Messrs. Christie's on February 20th. Some important groups of Frankenthal, which appears to be rising in estimation, are included in the porcelain. There is also the group of the lovers in an arbour of pink and gold scrolls. The home pottery includes a statuette of the Duke of Cumberland by Ralph Wood: and the porcelain, examples of most of the home manufactories. There are also Dresden, Sèvres, Nankin, famille verte and powdered blue chinas. The objects of art include a number of carved ivories of early date and ecclesiastical subjects, which were formerly in the Trapnell collection and are of various nationalities; a bronze bust of Professor Legros by Dalon; ecclesiastical vestments, brocades, Jacobean embroidery, an Aubusson tapestry, of the seventeenth century, of landscape subject with a border of flowers and foliage; and a Flemish panel showing the centaur Nessus and Dejanira, the wife of Hercules, in borders of caryatid figures and festoons of fruit, woven in the seventeenth century. Among the carpets and rugs is an example of Agra weaving, 13½ft. by 12ft., in which are represented beasts, birds and flowers on a red ground, while the border decoration is of arabesques on a dark blue field.

On February 22nd Messrs. Christie dispose of decorative furniture, objects of art and ceramics belonging to different properties, including important examples of marqueterie furniture of Dutch and French making. Of the latter there are a Louis XV commode, by J. Schmitz (ME), of serpentine shape, the drawers veneered with tulipwood and kingwood, having ormolu scroll handles and corner mounts, the top being of veined grey marble, and a Louis XVI oval marqueterie table inlaid with panels of flowers, rosettes and trelliswork, in chequer borders on a ground of tulipwood, containing a writing-slide, end drawer and shelf, and surmounted by a slab of veined pink marble, by L. P. Dusantoi (ME); a Louis XV upright secretaire inlaid with branches of flowers on tulipwood ground with kingwood borders, corner mounts of ormolu chased with scrollwork and having a fall-down front, drawer and folding doors; and a Louis XV escritoire inlaid with birds and a trophy, the ground being of cube pattern, with ormolu handles and corners. Among the English furniture there are several interesting Queen Anne cabinets, a William III marqueterie table inlaid with panels of birds and flowers in coloured woods and stained ivory on a ground of pollard walnut, and a pair of Chippendale mirrors.



WEDGWOOD PLAQUE, "THE CROWNING OF A CITHARIST," 1FT. 2½INS. BY 7½INS.

Some important pictures appeared in Messrs. Robinson and Fisher's on February 8th, including "Loch Katrine, Perthshire," by T. M. Richardson, painted in 1856, £210 (Sampson).

On February 19th and 20th Messrs. Sotheby will sell modern etchings with some drawings and lithographs from different properties and including a very fine impression of "The Toast," by Anders Zorn; "The Palace Doorway," by D. Y. Cameron, and his "Ponte Vecchio"; "Cowdray Castle with geese," in its published state, by Sir F. Seymour Haden, by whom also are "The Breaking-up of the Agamemnon," in its first state, unsigned, and "Battersea Reach" in its first state. They will dispose of, on February 22nd and following day, Persian and Indian manuscripts, illuminations and miniatures from the sixteenth century, illuminated books of Persian poetry in fine bindings, with textiles, embroideries, lacquer, metalwork and pottery. On the second day they will sell snuff-boxes, needle-cases, scent-bottles, candlesticks and other objects in Battersea enamel; miniatures, fans, embroideries, among which is a very curious stumpwork panel representing Adam and Eve, with a house, flowers and insects, said to have been done by a great-grandmother of George Washington; Persian pottery, Worcester and other porcelain.

THE AUTOMOBILE WORLD.

STEPS ON THE PATH TO PERFECTION

THE modern automobile is so remarkably efficient, and the few years of the post-war era, studded with difficulties as they have been, mark so noteworthy an improvement in all directions, that to criticise the up-to-date vehicle seems a little graceless. At the same time, a wide experience with nearly every type and make of motor vehicle suggests that designers in the last three or four years have rather tended to concentrate upon increased engine efficiency, to the exclusion of many a detail both in chassis and finished vehicle that is quite as much in need of development.

In most respects the world's motor industry is entitled to heartiest congratulation for the great progress that it has made in face of seemingly overwhelming odds, and it is in no spirit of carping criticism that we draw attention to a few details which for some reason have been overlooked in the development of the car as a whole.

RAISING THE SAFETY FACTOR.

Therefore, we will say that two purely mechanical improvements which, nevertheless, react directly upon the comfort of the motorist, have not been adopted as widely or as quickly as they should have been. These two details are four-wheel braking and thermostatic water control—both necessities obvious to anyone, whether expert or novice, who has once experienced the advantages of their use.

In regard to four-wheel braking, the advantages are a great increase in the safety factor of a car, particularly in inexpert hands—provided always that the braking system is so designed that the inherent danger of mal-adjustment is counteracted—and an increase in the possible average speed of the vehicle that would require a considerable amount of mere horse-power to effect. As a matter of fact, quick, safe braking, combined with good acceleration, is the principal factor not only in the matter of speed, but in that of comfort in driving as well, so far as a touring car is concerned.

Thermostatic control of the cooling system, except in one respect, is of less direct advantage, but as there is a temperature at which every engine runs most efficiently and most economically, and as thermostatic control ensures that this temperature shall be maintained, no matter what may be the conditions of running, there is little doubt that its advantages will show tangibly in the lower annual charges for fuel and oil, and maybe for replacements also.

Direct, appreciable benefit is felt at starting in cold weather and more particularly with a car—used, perhaps, for business purposes or for shopping—that has few straightaway runs. In the garage or the motor house the engine must be run wastefully for ten minutes or so before it is really fit to take out on the road, and, if the weather is at all cold, heat will be lost at each stoppage and, thereafter, for a few minutes the car will be awkward and unpleasant to handle—probably, of all places, in thick traffic. So far as the actual starting is concerned, hot water in the radiator is a partial remedy; but a permanent cure is afforded by that type of circulation control which shuts off the bulk of the water when the engine is dead cold. As the small quantity in the water jacket, which alone is subject to the heat generated by the power impulses in the cylinders, warms up, a valve automatically opens and allows the water in the radiator gradually to mingle. Thus, after the first half dozen explosions the temperature at the cylinders—the only point of importance—attains its correct level and thereafter is automatically maintained at that level.

THE TWO EXTREMES.

This system has been fitted to a car here and there for long enough to prove its efficiency in both theory and practice, and it is beginning occasionally to appear on well known British cars. Our point, however, is that neither four-wheel braking nor thermostatic control should be limited to the super-luxury class of car. Such refinement, maybe, is too expensive a matter of design and construction to find a place in the make-up of the utility car pure and simple, but in between the two extremes there are many vehicles costing, according to power and accommodation, anything from £400 to £1,000, that are fit subjects for the adoption of every refined development that is brought to light.

The thought of automatically controlled variation of the ignition point naturally comes to one's mind, but this is scarcely in the same category. In the first place it is debatable whether or not "automaticity" can be carried too far. Temperature control, whether by hand or by a thermostat, is a comparatively new thing; the ability to effect such control is an advantage of modern acquisition. Ignition control, on the other hand, is as old as the motor car. The only question is whether on the average car the variation of the firing point should be manual or automatic, or whether that point should be fixed.

USE OF THE IGNITION LEVER.

Personally, we are not in favour of fixed ignition, since in providing against misuse it eliminates also the possibility of skilful manipulation, and reduces the performance of a car to an average. Hand control has proved itself to be reasonably efficient and it has the advantage over automatic variation that the best ignition point for any combination of circumstances can be sought, whereas automatically controlled ignition is limited to a few definite combinations. Imagine a car on the road for one moment. A long level stretch of road calls for a small throttle opening and full "advance"; to increase the speed the throttle is opened further. On a hill the same throttle-opening requires gradually more and more retardation of the spark lever until, perhaps, a change of gear is necessary, when the throttle may be nearly closed and the ignition fully advanced again.

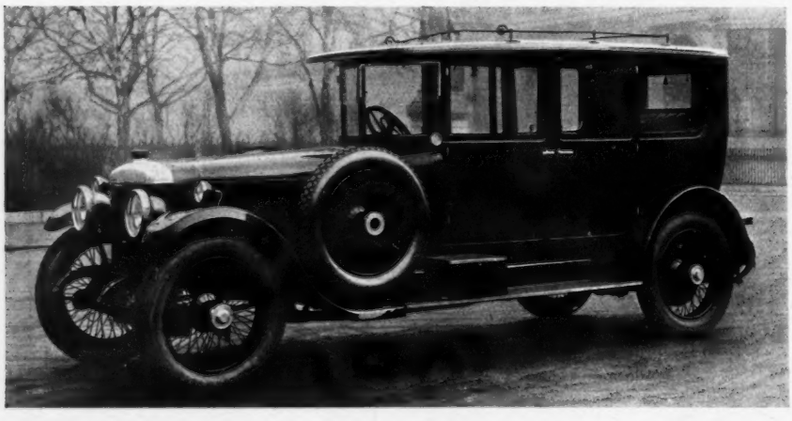
The ignition lever should be in use all the time, although it is a fault with most drivers to regard "pinking" or knocking as the signal to retard. The lever is there to prevent pinking, rather than to cure it, and properly used it is an important factor in the driving of a car.

The necessities in regard to the ignition point are so varied that, in spite of our desire to secure the maximum of refinement, it is to be feared that not only does the discarding of hand control rob car driving of a great deal of its pleasure, but, whether replaced by automatic control or fixed ignition, it is liable to reduce efficiency from maximum to mean.

This matter reminds us of another failing on many, if not most, cars of to-day, and that is the uncertainty of the ignition and throttle controls. The levers, joints and rods should be absolutely positive in their action and, provided that the moving parts of the system are given a drop of oil occasionally, should always give exactly the same setting at certain positions of the levers. This is far from being the case, however, as joints and bearings are often crude affairs and the levers themselves are usually incapable of delicate adjustment. The secret seems to be that a screw-down knob controlling an irreversible worm and nut—on the same principal as, but, of course, on a smaller scale than, the usual steering gear—will give finer and more easily operated adjustment than the common friction lever and arrangement of rods. At present this more efficient system is limited to cars of the highest class only—which is a pity.

ACCELERATOR POSITION.

The position of the accelerator pedal, together with the strength of its loading spring, again, is a matter that, on all too many cars, has not been given due consideration. It is unnecessary to elaborate upon the fatigue that arises from an incorrectly situated pedal, which forces the driver to keep his ankle in an unnatural position for the whole duration of a run, but it may not be so generally realised that the effect of a spring that is either too light or too strong is very nearly as bad. An accelerator pedal spring should be adjustable for tension, of course, but it very frequently is not.



A FINE 45 H.P. DAIMLER WITH ENCLOSED-DRIVE LIMOUSINE BODY BY THE REGENT CARRIAGE COMPANY.
There is a partition between the front and the rear compartments, thus maintaining the characteristics of a limousine.

CLUTCH SPRING FAULTS.

One is astonished to find that, in spite of the ever-increasing number of women who drive, clutch springs remain in many instances on the heavy side. Whether the comparatively great force required to withdraw the clutch is due to too strong a spring, a badly designed clutch necessitating a strong spring or to a poor system of leverage, the effect is to make a car most unpleasant to handle and difficult to drive decently in traffic. And this is quite unnecessary. We recall one particular dry multiple-plate clutch that came under our notice. This could be adjusted so that the pedal could be pushed right down easily with the little finger and yet there was no sign of slip.

Speaking generally, another matter that causes a lot of unnecessary trouble, and gives rise to waste and dirt, is the size and position of the oil-filling orifice. This might easily be made of more ample dimensions than often is the case, while there is nothing to prevent the actual orifice from being brought up to a convenient position for filling from the standard cans in which the oil is purchased.

REMOVING DETACHABLE HEADS.

While on the subject of waste and avoidable trouble, one wonders how often the enthusiastic amateur who undertakes the task of decarbonising his engine finds himself able to re-use the existing cylinder-head gasket. The removal of the head, especially when it is attempted by a motorist for the first time, usually proves difficult, and almost invariably is eventually accomplished by gradually forcing the head up the securing studs with the aid of a screwdriver or other gasket-destroying implement.

As a matter of fact, the head may be removed and replaced time after time without damaging the gasket if care is used, and the matter would be much simplified if a couple of lips at each end of the engine were cast on cylinder block and head. The lip on the head could be drilled and tapped so that a bolt could be screwed down to bear against the under lip, and so gently jack the head up the studs.

A USEFUL HINT.

Failing this provision—and the detachable head has been in use for long enough now for manufacturers to have incorporated some such elementary arrangement in their design—a useful tip when one wants to remove the head and yet to preserve the gasket intact is first to drain the radiator, then slacken the holding-down nuts on the studs a turn or two, and start up the engine. There is no danger of overheating, since the first four—or six, if there be six cylinders—explosions will have done the trick, and the engine may be shut off immediately.

Another point is to avoid the use of gold size, or even engine oil, in remaking the joint. If the two faces of the joint are properly finished, and if the gasket is undamaged, no such aid should be required; but after thoroughly cleaning the copper of the gasket, it may be lightly dusted with the finest possible powdered graphite and polished. If the head and cylinder faces are treated in the same way, less difficulty will be experienced next time the job is undertaken, and the removal of the gasket itself without damage will be easy.

REVERSE STOPS AND BRAKES.

But to return to the deficiencies of the modern car. We know of two cases where it is possible in changing to bottom gear on a very steep hill to run past the stop, and, as the car-speed will be very slow when such a change is necessary, to get into reverse. While it is admitted that after using such a car for a little while one should become accustomed to the zig-zag arrangement of this portion of the is called the "Berkeley" Landaulet: a distinguished-looking, artistically-finished car with all those meritorious qualities associated with the group-name "Austin Twelve." The seating in the interior is for four passengers, while a fifth has accommodation in a spare seat beside the chauffeur. Freedom from irritation in city traffic and easy riding over ill-conditioned country roads are two notable features of this splendid model.

gate, it must be remembered that when first speed is required it is wanted badly. The hill is very steep, the driver may be a novice and, losing his or her head, slam home "first" speed, only to find on letting the clutch in that the car starts off with a full throttle—backwards! A cool head and good brakes are then badly wanted, and—why will not manufacturers give us longer side brake levers with a more powerful leverage, and in a more accessible position?

Many firms rushed blindly into the central change-speed and brake position when this arrangement was first introduced from America. They provided thereby easy access to the driver's seat by a wide side door. This was to the good; but in some cases the levers prevent the driver from finding a comfortable resting place for his left foot which, by the way, should not be left on the clutch pedal when that pedal is not in use. In other cases the levers are in the passenger's way, which perhaps matters less, and often—usually, in fact—they quite prevent the use of the front seat, in spite of its ample width, by a third passenger. It must not be thought that we are exclaiming against the central position as such; it has many advantages and, so far as position alone is concerned, it really does not matter much whether one uses the right hand or the left. A little intelligence is required in planning out the footboard and its various encumbrances, that is all.

CURING SUSPENSION ILLS.

There are many small details about the chassis that call for unnecessary labour or that for one reason or another are not so efficient as they might be. Take the case of the springs, for instance. On no car are these perfect, but on some cars they are better than others. Also, two ways of improving existing suspension have been discovered. It is an admitted fact that imperfect suspension may be materially improved by the addition of shock absorbers of the type best suited to the requirements of those particular springs. It is admitted, also, that springs which are rusty and dirty and dry of grease do not function so well as those which are clean and bright as to the opposing faces of their leaves, and that have a coating of graphite grease on the working surfaces.

Then, if shock absorbers and gaiters are an improvement, why in all conscience do not all manufacturers fit their chassis with them? The gear-box and back axle gears are equipped with protective and lubricant-retaining cases. Why should the springs be left bare to the attacks of wet and grit?

Shock absorbers, of course, ought not to be necessary. All the properties of shock and rebound absorption that they provide should be inherent in the spring itself. But they are not; designers frankly admit themselves beaten. They do not admit themselves beaten when it is found that an engine of a certain size—say 11.9 h.p.—will not "rev." at a speed capable of propelling the chassis through a gear of $4\frac{1}{2}$ to 1 at a greater pace than forty miles an hour. Certainly not! They lighten the reciprocating parts, balance the crank-shaft, adjust the bevel gears, or even increase the reduction to $4\frac{3}{4}$ to 1—and in the long run, by one means or another, they get the extra miles per hour.

But with springs they simply admit the relative lack of efficiency, a state of mind that is the more obviously unsound in that any amateur who is fortunate enough to obtain wide experience of different makes knows that one car of a certain type may be very much better or very much worse than another almost identical vehicle in the matter of suspension.

DANGER OF A BROKEN GUARANTEE.

Even admitting the difficulty of improving springing, however, it is known that an improvement is effected by fitting shock absorbers. This being so, it were surely wiser for the chassis manufacturers to select the most suitable type and undertake the fitting and adjustment of these accessories? The reputation of a car may easily suffer through ill-fitted oddments with which the maker of the car has no concern, and we should imagine that shock absorbers are peculiarly susceptible to variations of adjustment. We should question, moreover, whether a maker would stand by his guarantee in the case of damage arising through, or capable of being attributed to, a badly fitted accessory.

While we are on a semi-technical phase of the subject, it may be well to mention the matter of periodic vibration, a fault which, while trivial in itself, has cumulatively evil consequences, and is not particularly difficult to cure. Many, but by no means all engines, more or less regardless of price, have one speed at which a definite pulsation of vibrations is given off. This may be noticeable only in the apparently greater fuss with which the engine accomplishes its work in the neighbourhood of that speed or, if there is a loose part—such as the control tubes, through the centre of which the steering pillar passes from steering wheel to steering gear-box, which are attached at their upper ends to the throttle and ignition levers—this may set up a most irritating chatter when the engine speed approaches the critical point. Below that point and at four or five miles an hour past the critical speed the behaviour of the engine may be all that could be desired; but it will most likely happen that the noisy point in the engine's range will fall at just about the speed at which one wishes to do the bulk of one's driving. The driver very soon knows exactly when to expect its recurring annoyance.

Advantages of "Kick-starting."

IN view of our recent articles on easy starting, wherein the use of the foot instead of the hand, for giving a sharp initial impulse to an engine that is difficult to start in the conventional fashion, was advocated, the following letter is of interest:

SIR,—For over two years I have gone every week about the country with friends, motoring; and during that time have consistently practised starting up with a view to subsequent ownership. Usually my efforts have been on a car which is a favourite with ladies on account of its easy starting, I believe. Very rarely have I been successful: so much so that it is a joke that I am to have the car as soon as I can start it "on my own." However, I read the article in COUNTRY LIFE of January 20th, and, after the car had stood out in the cold of last Sunday for three hours, started her off on the fourth attempt with the starting-handle used as a kick-starter. Eight miles farther on, when the engine was hot, I tried the old pull-up, but was as helpless as ever, until my friend gave it a gentle pull and it started at once. Incidentally, I may say I am credited with some heart trouble which bars all effort as risky. A thrust downward is an entirely different proposition, and I have found many elderly men who suffer after the effort of pulling up the starting handle. I begin to wonder why a starting pedal is not fitted as standard. I owe you a big debt of gratitude.—MEDICUS.

Race for Standard Cars.

THE Junior Car Club, which promoted the 200-mile races at Brooklands in 1921 and 1922, have applied to the R.A.C. for a permit to hold a race on July 4th, on the Isle of Man Tourist Trophy course, which is roughly 37½ miles in length. The cars would cover the course six or seven times.

A novel feature of the regulations of the projected race is that specially built racing cars will be barred, and the cars eligible must, in their main essentials, have the same parts as those in production, and as sold to the public at a fixed price. Another new feature is that price is taken into consideration in awards on formulæ; thus a low-priced car that did not finish first on time might be first on the formulæ award. It has often been said that a race for specially built racing cars has little educational value, for the cars are usually specially built, regardless of cost, and bear very little resemblance to the cars of the same make sold to the public. In this race, however, the only deviations from standard permitted will be those permitting the cars to be specially tuned for speed. They will be fitted with stream-lined racing bodies.

In order to reduce the cost of preparing cars for the race, and to equalise the chances of all competitors, it is desired to prevent the participation of special racing cars, and for this reason certain parts are required to be standard as on cars actually in production.

Awards will be on the basis of time and formulæ, and the formulæ will include a factor which takes into consideration the price of the standard car as sold to the public. Further details will be issued later, from the head offices of the Junior Car Club, Clock House, Arundel Street, Strand, London, W.C.2.

ITEMS.

In the West of England.—For touring purposes the R.A.C. has for a long time been established in the West of England at Exeter, where an office has been maintained in conjunction with the Exeter Official Information Bureau. The spirit of progress has now led the Club to place a fully equipped local office there at 21, Queen Street, where tourists will find all the advice and assistance they need and where the interests of the motorists of Devon and Cornwall will be served. The Official Information Bureau will still be located in the same office, the effect of the alteration being that the R.A.C. has now taken over the premises and has replaced a partial service by a complete one carrying on all the general work of the organisation. Local motorists welcome the enlargement of the scope of this office.

Motor Car Index Marks.—The R.A.C. has republished its list of motor car index marks, and will send a copy to any car owner on request. So many additions have been made lately to the marks allotted to registration authorities that the new list revised up to date is very welcome.

R.A.C. Touring Notes.—We gather from the Touring Department of the R.A.C. that the winter traffic this season has been appreciably heavier than that last season. Not only have cross-Channel routes been considerably utilised, but also long sea shipments have been effected, such as London to Marseilles, Liverpool to Marseilles, Southampton to Genoa, etc. The French Riviera and Northern Italy are still the favourite districts for wintering. Algeria is also favoured, but the majority of tourists there have planned through the R.A.C. to hire cars in that country. Very many members have also gone without their cars to Switzerland for winter sports. There has been a very level and regular daily application for British routes, due possibly to the open weather which we have experienced thus far. It is not often that the R.A.C. is called upon to prepare itineraries in America or Canada, although considerable use is made of the advice of the Touring Department in connection with American and Canadian Customs and licensing formalities, but latterly several members have applied for routes through America and Canada, their intention being to purchase a car at the outset and sell it on the completion of their tour, or in some cases to hire a car for use there after arrival.

Making GOOD Brake Lining——BETTER

When Ferodo Bonded Asbestos has gone through the process of DIE-PRESSING—it has reached, as things stand at present, the highest point of usefulness.

DIE-PRESSING IS A PATENTED Ferodo process — an extra process — it produces the SUPER Brake Lining.

We are the only firm in the business who maintain a staff of engineers and chemists exclusively employed on research work, and we discovered that vertical pressure up to 1,000 tons on each piece of Ferodo Bonded Asbestos produced a dense mass, as hard as iron, which could not be compressed in use.

You never have to adjust the brake except to take up wear. Nothing can create brake confidence like FERODO DIE-PRESSING, and you can expect at least double the wear when you use Ferodo Die-pressed Brake Lining.

THE PENCHANT FOR PATTERNED MATERIALS

VELAZQUEZ AND SECOND EMPIRE FROCKS.

COUTURIERES are not by way of letting the grass grow under their feet in these days. They are up and doing very early, with their dress displays and advance models. And there is no doubt about it, these dress shows are extraordinarily helpful. One gets such a splendid general idea of what is likely to be worn, and that is much better than isolated examples. At the same time it takes two or three of such affairs to bring about a safe selective decision.

Anyway, there is no question but that patterned materials are to take precedence of plain fabrics. Some of the patterned woollens, however, of the broché order look as though they had been passed under a steam roller, as the figuring is often only apparent on the closest inspection. These, of course, fashion the most fascinating coat-frocks, all very tight and straight at the back, but inclined to flare at the sides or in the front; also charming little coatees, frequently accompanied by skirts of a plain surfaced stuff.

Perhaps one of the most startling innovations is the fancy for soft thin silks, printed in small Eastern designs and colours. They are, indeed, so fine as to be almost transparent. An exceedingly attractive model seen had a quite full skirt of printed silk, worn with a short, perfectly loose and sleeveless coat of dark blue taffetas, the latter surmounting the most enchanting little blouse of sulphur-coloured Georgette trimmed with lace dyed to tone and relieved by discreet touches of pale jade green.

Then really surpassingly beautiful are the lamé or metal brocades, devisedf or evening toilettes en grande tenue. Interwoven with the metal threads are the most delicate pastel tints, no one of which predominates, so that the general effect is of a glistening surface. Simple to a degree, in the matter of ligné, was one of these exquisite fabrics, straight panels just very lightly draped at the hips being dropped back and front over a slim gold-tissue underskirt.

At a moderately low line the draperies were caught together by small trails of parti-coloured flowers and foliage, a wreath of the same defining the round décolletage, which was cut right off the shoulders. In the case of another of these creations, a scheme of delicate peach mauve and silver brocade, there appeared a deep swathed sash of peach chiffon velvet that, after passing twice round the figure, resolved into a narrow sweeping side train.

Second Empire modes are making a big bid for favour; and one wonders who will have the courage first to essay these ground-touching, exceedingly full skirts and close-fitting waist bodices. When they are seen worn by the graceful, highly trained mannequin, who seems to float along rather than walk, one feels desperately tempted to make the plunge. It would, naturally, be a strange experience at first to be free of all anxiety as to shoes and silk stockings, and, equally so, feel one's shoulders coming out of one's bodice; but we have assimilated and worn far more trying fashions, and although I do not for a moment imagine these second Empire modes will make much headway this season, they nevertheless require to be closely watched and not swept aside as impossible, future issues.

The autocratic dame who rules our dress destinies has a curious obstinacy and great tenacity of purpose, waiting and abiding her time, frequently for years, but she invariably wins out in the end. Nor in the realm of what may be termed picture frocks must there be overlooked the feeling for Velazquez. This Spanish painter was born about 1599 and lived until 1660, one imagines fashions may have changed somewhat in those odd sixty years, although they moved far more slowly than is the case now, but the insignia of a Velazquez frock to-day is a full long skirt, accompanied by a close-fitting little bodice, sometimes broken by a stomacher and under petticoat, and long puffed and wrinkled sleeves.

A modified Velazquez creation was carried out in an old-world pale snuff-coloured moiré, interwoven with fine glistening threads of gold, the ballooning jupe trimmed about the hem with entredeux of gold braid arranged to form a lattice pattern, which was repeated at the elbows of the long sleeves and nowhere else. This is quite a wearable gown, always provided we can allow the eye to become attuned to the marked volte-face in the silhouette. Several brides, it is to be remarked, have of late selected Velazquez dresses for their attendants, and every small feather shows the way of the wind.

It is a fact that one's interest in dress often rubs up one's history, and furthermore brings the realisation how clothes at all times have reflected the manners, amusements and even the morals of the age. Our own time, when it comes to be written, should make interesting reading; albeit the eclectic choice obtaining will doubtless prove a trifle bewildering. Criticism, perhaps not always kind, may be hurled at the sleeveless incidental bodices now being worn, slit open from armpit to waist, as also the backless corsage, persuasions it may be difficult to reconcile with the demure all-in-one frock of almost quaker-like simplicity.

Apropos the latter, the original pictured model depicts one of these rather demure dresses. This, as you see, conforms to all the latest edicts and, in particular, displays the new fan-like draperies either side the front; while a final note of smartness is accorded by a quaint little knotted kerchief of soft Eastern printed silk.

These knotted kerchiefs are really the prettiest neck fitments imaginable and, carried lower about the shoulders and so disposed as to stand a little up like the old-time halter collar, they are equally effective on evening bodices, A beaver shade of tricotine or wool rep would make up admirably after this manner, also a fine navy suiting serge, which material, despite many rumours to the contrary, is still being worn, though not perhaps quite to the same extent as neutral tones.

Embroideries of all kinds are still rampant, both handwork and applied, though the general tendency is to mass these in the guise of waistcoat fronts, whole sleeves or sleeve empiècements, large poche motifs and the like. A silver metal thread embroidery on grey cloth imparted a delightful touch of relief to a dark blue navy suiting, the front of the bodice shaped in the form of a bolero with square edges, over a waistcoat of the embroidered grey cloth, a triangular piece of which was inset at the back of the slight bell sleeves.

And this bolero movement is also an indication to be watched. It is not very general at present, but it is here, together with a high draped sash, both, whereof, are essentially Spanish in feeling. Whereby hangs a tale. L. M. M.

TAKEN FROM A NOTE-BOOK

"THERE'S NOTHING LIKE LEATHER."

"FLOOR cushions" suggest to most of us articles often charming if a little flimsy for their purpose, decidedly hackneyed in design, but very comfortable and convenient. Messrs. Asprey of 165, New Bond Street, W., well known as purveyors of all sorts of beautiful things in gold and silver, are offering floor cushions just now which have all the usefulness and all the attraction of those we are too much accustomed to see and none of their drawbacks. Hand-made in Morocco of native-tanned leather, their lovely shapes and colours make the department in which they are shown as beautiful as an Aladdin's cave, yet they are fashioned to wear endlessly and, stuffed with kapok or down, are endlessly comfortable. For ornament both embroiderings and strappings of different-coloured leathers are employed, and shapes, designs and colours are so varied that the room for which one could not be chosen, which would not add both to its comfort and beauty, must be far to seek. Whether a flat, oblong cream-coloured cushion, the sole decoration of which is a lozenge on the upper side most delicately embroidered in varied shades of golden brown, is more beautiful than a cushion shaped like a great cube, but with flattened corners, of a most comfortable height and ornamented with an inlet design in cinnamon-coloured leather, contrasting with and relieving the soft shade of purple in which it is made, only individual taste and requirements can decide. These morocco leather cushions are one of the most useful and delightful innovations seen in the shops for some time past.

AN ASSAULT-AT-ARMS.

An assault-at-arms will be held at the Hotel Cecil on February 19th at four o'clock, in aid of the Benevolent Fund for the British Legion and of the British League of Help for the Devastated Areas of France. H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, His Excellency the French Ambassador and Lord Haig are among the patrons. Tickets may be obtained from the Hotel Cecil, Messrs. Ashton and Mitchell, 33, Old Bond Street, W., all Messrs. Keith Prowse's branches, the London Fencing Club, Bertrand's Rooms and the Vicomte de Lapré.

AN INDUSTRIAL DEPARTURE.

The stupidity of the ordinary English working-class holiday, with its aimless extravagance and uninteresting diversions, has saddened a great many observers, aware that something much better could, by the exercise of a very little thought and some organisation, be possible or most industrial workers. Messrs. Cadbury of Bournville have, last year and this, done something very practical in this direction, taking parties of boys to the Continent for short holidays, the boys paying the greater part of the cost and making up a portion of the time Last month Mr. P. S. Cadbury, to whom the credit for this interesting departure is due, took nineteen boys to the winter sports at Wengen.

"CHUBB."

"Chubb" is a household word in the matter of safes, locks and keys. The firm, established in 1818, has spent a hundred years in perfecting its productions. As scientific discovery helps the thief to become more and more powerful a menace, so do Messrs. Chubb become more and more ingenious in checkmating him. In 1817 a robbery took place at Portsmouth Dockyard, as the result of which the Government offered a reward of £100 for a lock which could be opened with no other key than its own. It seems that it was this incident which led to the founding of Chubbs; at any rate, the new Detector Lock was soon in wide use, the earliest workshop being in Portsea, Hampshire. To-day the manufacture of Chubb productions demands an establishment at Wolverhampton, covering as much as ten acres, besides many offices, of which the chief is at 128, Queen Victoria Street, E.C.4. The transformation of the steel, as it enters the works in bar or sheet, into safe, strong-room, steel cupboard or anti-blowpipe door, is a fascinating process which involves a great deal of specialised knowledge and skill. To the business man who has need of new or improved protection against loss, the long list of banks, Government offices, railways and other institutions included among Chubb security users should suggest an example worth following.

NAUTILUS GRATES.

The grates manufactured by the Nautilus Fire Company, Limited (60, Oxford Street, W.1), should certainly be considered by everyone intending to alter fireplace arrangements. Three of the practical features of these grates are of the utmost importance: they have back flue outlets which ensure that the heat, which in ordinary coal grates is lost up the chimney, is collected by the Nautilus canopy and given off into the room; complete damper control; and a minimum of smoke and ash. Improved Nautilus grates are excellent for burning any solid fuel, coal, coke, wood or peat, and they are equipped with wheels so as to be easily removable. In the summer the Nautilus can be wheeled away, leaving room for ferns or plants. The makers have issued an interesting booklet, which will be sent on application, and which illustrates, among other things, really original and charming fire dogs for use with the Nautilus grates. An invitation to visit their showroom at 60, Oxford Street, is extended to everyone interested in the subject.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE NATIONAL PROVINCIAL AND UNION BANK

Sir Harry Goschen, presiding at the Annual General Meeting of the National Provincial and Union Bank of England, Limited, in referring to the position of agriculture assured the shareholders that the fullest consideration had been given by the Bank to the farmers' position. Advances had been made to many thousands and every reasonable application would receive generous treatment. The profit and loss account for the year showed a balance of £2,743,440, including £889,249 brought forward. One dividend of 8 per cent. was paid in July, and a similar dividend was payable on February 2nd.

A PUMP FOR THE COUNTRY HOUSE.

The question of pumping is often a very serious one for the owner of a country house and deserves particular consideration in view of the water difficulty which the drought of 1921 occasioned, history which may repeat itself any summer. One of the best pumps for a country house is undoubtedly the "Squeegee" Positive Rotary High Speed Pump. It has no plungers, gears or sliding parts, but has two rotors which roll round the casing, squeezing the liquid before them. It will draw from a depth of 25ft. vertically and deliver to a height up to 100ft. to 150ft. As it does not require priming it is particularly to be recommended in cases where the control is automatic or skilled attention cannot be given. Its high speed enables the "Squeegee" pump to be coupled to Standard electric motors and it is one of the very few pumps of the positive type which can be so driven. It is made in sizes with capacities from 200 gallons to 13,000 gallons per hour and ranges in price from £20 to £300. It can be supplied with petrol or oil engines or electric motors. All particulars will be sent by the Avamore Engineering Company, Limited, Haslemere, Surrey, on request, to any reader of COUNTRY LIFE.

SOMETHING NEW IN SEEDS.

The extraordinary developments of horticulture during recent years have put many new and improved vegetable and flower seeds at the disposal of the gardener, and "The Amateur's Guide in Horticulture for 1923," produced by Messrs. Sutton and Sons of Reading and sent post free on request to anyone interested in the subject, makes it clear that a number of these improvements are due to the enterprise of that well known firm. In dealing with kitchen garden crops it is shown that the peas of to-day not only are superior from the point of view of the cuisine, but the size of the peas and pods has been remarkably increased; the V.C. variety offered by Messrs. Sutton produces pods up to nine inches in length.

AT "THE GAZEWAY."

A transformation which seems symbolical of the victory of modern exuberance and love of colour over the repression and dreariness of the last century has been accomplished at "The Gazeway," Surbiton, where an Early Victorian house of singular hideousness, surrounded by a wilderness, has become one of real charm, set in a beautifully planned garden. "The Gazeway" has been opened by Messrs. W. H. Gaze and Sons, Limited, of 10, Conduit Street, W.1, and Kingston-on-Thames, for public inspection, as a means of showing exactly what they can do as builders, decorators, garden architects and craftsmen. The house has recently been finished, and in the spring, when the garden is to be seen to advantage, transformation will be complete. Continuous contact with new ideas, both as regards convenience and decoration, makes an inspection of the house quite stimulating. The yellow drawing-room, the blue dining-room and nursery, the pink bedroom, the grey and green room, all display the same intrepid use of colour and dexterity in obtaining novel effects. Everything that is good among labour-saving devices is included; the visitor may judge of the effect of all the different kinds of flooring and will see much to admire in furniture, both modern and antique. The gardens include a model rock and water garden, topiary garden, Dutch, alpine, terrace, herbaceous gardens, a rose and moraine garden, a children's garden and a garden of remembrance. Appointments to view "The Gazeway" may be made by writing to W. Gaze, 19–23, High Street, Kingston-on-Thames.

ERASMIC Shaving Stick

NO MISFIRES

Clean, crisp sport keeps you live and happy. Failure is depressing. You want to be in good temper, to look as fit as you feel. And fitness begins in the bath-room in the mornings and—no mistake about it—a misfire shave is irritating to the temper and the skin. "ERASMIC" Shaving Stick never misfires. It is the soap for every man, sportsman or indoor man—never burning nor drying. It has the double-barrelled merit of shaving easily and leaving the tonic effect of open air.

PRELIMINARY ANNOUNCEMENT.
KENT
One mile from Barham; five miles from Canterbury.
THE HISTORIC PROPERTY, known as DIGGES PLACE, BARHAM,

It is typical of the period of mellowed red brick; the accommodation comprises central hall, drawing room with wide open fireplace and fine old beams, dining room, large kitchen, seven bedrooms, bathroom (h. and c.), independent hot water service.
There are simple grounds bounded by an ancient flint wall with ample space for two tennis courts; there are some very fine old farmbuildings, including a magnificent old barn; Company's water to house and buildings; two excellent cottages; the whole property extends to an area of ABOUT 340 ACRES,
and is to be offered for SALE by AUCTION as a whole, or divided into five Lots, including the house and buildings, with 58 acres.
Would be dealt with at once by Private Treaty, at a very moderate price.
AUCTIONEERS, Messrs. JAMES STYLES & WHITLOCK, 44, St. James' Place, London, S.W. 1, Rugby and Oxford.

NEAR TO A CHARMING OLD TOWN.
TO BE SOLD, an historic PROPERTY that should particularly appeal to a retired Colonial or Army Officer interested in architecture and desirous of farming on a moderate scale (or the land could easily be let off). The Residence occupies a fine situation high up with good views. It dates from the XVth century, with particularly beautiful mullioned windows with a fair proportion of the original glass. As at present arranged, it contains hall, dining and drawing rooms, five bedrooms, bathroom, and offices; but at a very moderate expense, the magnificent great hall of the XVth century with wide carved stone fireplace, could be converted to dining hall, with three bedrooms and bathroom over thus given, eight bed and dressing rooms. The land comprises just over 100 ACRES,
practically all rich grass, sloping to the river, which provides fishing; farmbuildings and modern cottage. Price very moderate.—Inspected by JAMES STYLES and WHITLOCK, 44, St. James' Place, S.W. 1. (L 2194.)

LEAMINGTON SPA.
AN ATTRACTIVE RESIDENCE, situated on the outskirts of the town, and containing hall, three reception rooms, eight bedrooms, bathroom, servants' hall, and usual offices, etc.; Company's water, main drainage, electric light, telephone; tennis court and gardens of about one acre.
PRICE £2,200.
Details of JAMES STYLES & WHITLOCK, Bank St, Rugby; and 44, St. James' Place, S.W. 1.

GLOUCESTER AND WILTS BORDERS.
An exceptional opportunity to anyone requiring a beautiful old Manor House of moderate size, where the land can be farmed or let off.
THE MANOR is right away from roads, dates from about 1700, is of stone, with stone tile roof, and has mullioned windows throughout both floors. It contains STONE-FLAGGED HALL, THREE RECEPTION ROOMS, SOME NINE BEDROOMS, AND BATHROOM.
Small garden, bounded by stone wall, tennis lawn; there are two sets of first-rate buildings of typical Gloucestershire character, stone built, and include a particularly fine old barn.
EXCELLENT WATER SUPPLY.
The land includes about 400 acres pasture, about 90 arable, and 30 woodland.
The property provides first-rate sporting, is within a few miles of the kennels of the Duke of Beaufort's Hunt, and within easy reach of polo.
It is in every way suited to a gentleman's occupation and the farm can either be worked or let off (having a separate farmhouse).
THE PRICE OF £10,500
represents a purely agricultural value, with all the facilities of a residential property.
Details and plan with JAMES STYLES & WHITLOCK, 44, St. James' Place, S.W. 1, and Bank Street, Rugby. Inspected. (L 1855.)

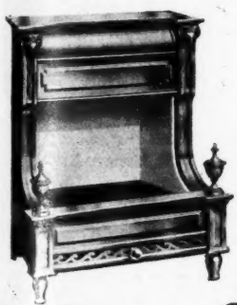
Less smoke more heat



The scientific Nautilus principle (patent) ensures practically smokeless combustion—a Nautilus has often proved the only cure for a smoky chimney.

This is because the Nautilus principle involves a special type of flue, with back smoke outlets, complete damper control, etc.

"THE THINGS THAT MATTER"

QUALITY and FINISH.—The best that English workmanship can yield.

FLOOR SPACE ECONOMY. – 4ft. 4in. x 1ft. 7in.

INTERIOR CAPACITY.—It will hold three times as much as any ordinary wardrobe, everything a well-dressed man requires.

ACCESSIBILITY.—Each and every article is at hand, in view, and in proper proportioned compartments, supplies are seen at a glance—there is no waste space.

PLEASURABLE UTILITY.—An unending pleasure to the tidy—a necessity as well to the untidy—it is the most convenient way of preserving clothes, and economises time, space, money . . . and temper.

Wardrobe service and dressing table service are combined in the Compactom Clothing Cabinet. It serves the dual purpose and is, therefore, the only piece of dressing furniture necessary to satisfy the requirements of the most exacting.

The one feature which it is difficult for us to portray on paper is quality—finish—this is the best that English workmanship can produce.

Reliability & Low Running Costs

IN order to prove to the public that the Armstrong Siddeley 6 Cylinder Cars besides being moderate in first cost are reliable in use and economical in running expenses, both an 18 h.p. Open Touring model and a 30 h.p. Interior Drive Limousine were run—under R.A.C. observation—10,000 miles and 15,000 miles respectively—each distance much longer than that which the average owner accomplishes in one year. Twenty-five thousand miles—more than the entire distance round the world—in 57 days!

Both cars were run day and night continuously—450 miles every 24 hours (Sundays excepted). Both emerged triumphant from their test.

Full particulars in R.A.C. Certificates, of which copies will be sent post free on application.

Country House

solved by Holophane Illuminating Engineers

Holophane

The lighting arrangements in many country houses often leave much to be desired. Gas or electric installations are frequently out of date and quite inadequate for efficient lighting. The lights are placed where they cannot give a good effect. They often waste more than half the current consumed owing to incorrect reflection and shading.

All these troubles may be easily overcome by

Scientific Illumination

Holophane Scientific Illumination is the outcome of 30 years' experience as LIGHTING SPECIALISTS. It is backed by a unique organisation retaining fully qualified ILLUMINATING ENGINEERS, whose advice as to installing a complete lighting plant, or carrying out alterations to existing fittings, may be had free of charge or obligation at any time.

Holophane Scientific Illumination enables every room, stairway or corner to be lit correctly without waste. Suitable fittings, correctly placed, and reflecting the light exactly where it is wanted, result in perfect comfort for all at a most reasonable cost.

Write for Illustrated Brochure

HOLOPHANE, Ltd., 31, Elverton St., Vincent Sq., S.W.1

N.B.—See that the name Holophane appears on the Unit purchased. No others are genuine.

MILEAGE

When you buy Tyres you are buying mileage.

Never forget that fact.

IT is the price you pay per mile that matters, not the initial cost. Never think of a tyre as an article. Think of it as distance to be covered for the least amount of money. The tyre that will carry you safely over the greatest number of miles is the tyre that is truly economical. Dunlop tyres last the longest. We made the first pneumatic tyre—we are to-day making the best Cord.

S. F. EDGE says:—

"I thought it only right to let you know how very successful the Dunlop Cord Tyres were which you supplied me with for my six cylinder A.C. car which was entered recently at Brooklands, and gained such a big series of records from 2 to 12 hours inclusive, averaging for 12 hours over 70 miles an hour. I believe they stand with the unique record of having run a greater distance at 70 miles an hour than any set of tyres in the world have ever done."

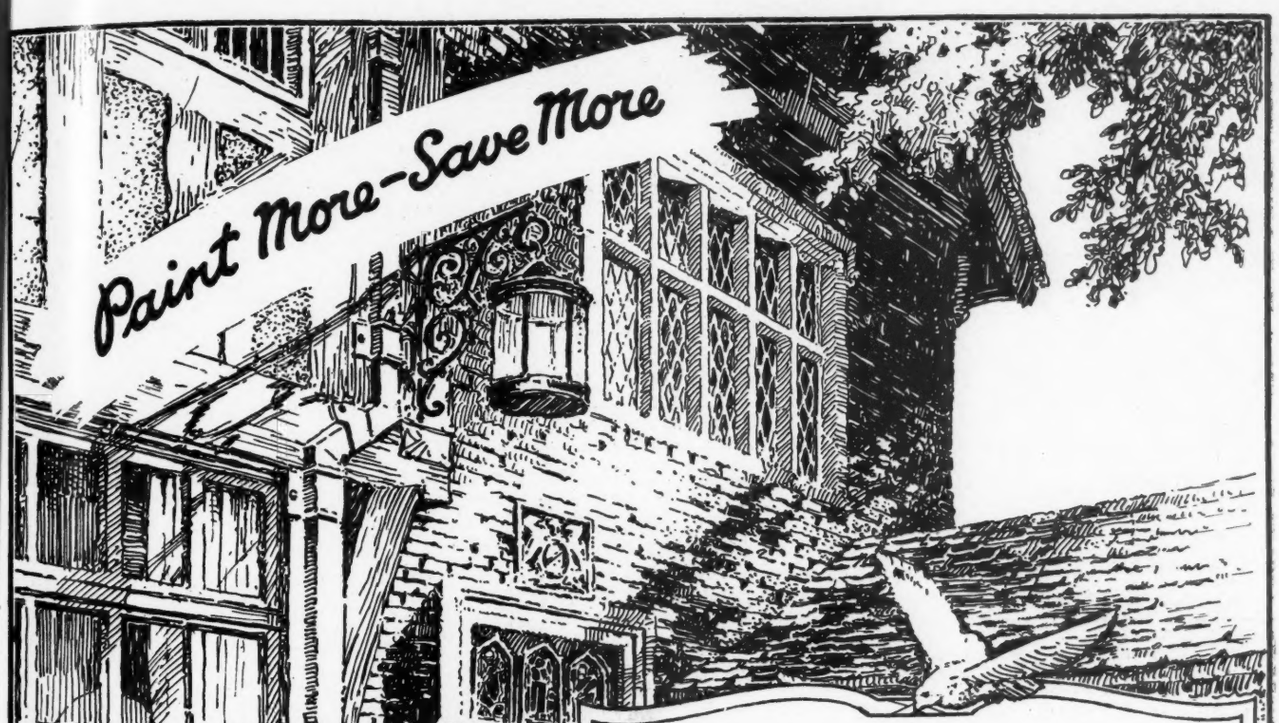
TRADE MARK



Rot-the Burglar

YOU lock the doors and fasten the windows to protect yourself against burglars. But do you give the exposed parts of the woodwork a chance to protect themselves against rot?

Dry rot is just like a burglar. It watches for a chance to sneak in and rob the wood of its strength. And it does sneak in—if it's not kept out by Paint. Rot can't stand Paint. It won't come near it.

Your duty towards your house demands that you examine the woodwork thoroughly. If the paint is worn, the wood is no longer weather-proofed; it's time to see your decorator.

You may say, "I'll wait another year." You may lose a lot. The cost of new woodwork would pay for many, many paintings.

Issued by The National Federation of Associated Paint, Colour and Varnish Manufacturers of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Paintmore and Mr. Savemore say, "When the paint's away the rot comes to stay."

A LOGICAL ASPECT

In a leading article in the "Machine Tool Review" for Nov.-Dec. there appear the following important comments on methods of manufacture:

"Cost of manufacture is reduced by elimination of hand-work, which, in itself, offers no assurance of superior quality in the product. Good machine work will produce components which, in accuracy of form and size, are at least equal to those obtainable by the best hand-work. The wide-spread idea that hand-made watches, GUNS and other things are superior to the machine-made because they are made by hand, is a fallacy."

The B.S.A. Shot Gun is produced on highly efficient machinery from specially selected and tested materials, and combines all the essential features of a good gun, viz., beautiful lines, great strength, perfect balance, sweet crisp trigger pulls and fine pattern and penetration.

EMERALD EXPERTS

of Regent Street were airing their knowledge in the High Court of Justice on the 1st inst. One famous firm stated that an emerald and diamond brooch was worth £2,250, while another famous firm a few doors off valued it at £1,000. The profits made by West End Firms were said to be 50 per cent. I could have added ofttimes 100 per cent. It is so difficult to convince the public that there is such a difference between buying and selling, and that the jeweller must live and make a profit. Strange as it may seem, a butcher with £500 capital makes as good a living with his shop as the average shopkeeping jeweller does with £5,000. There are rivals in Piccadilly as well as in Regent Street. One maintains it is better to sell over the counter and thus avoid the "disastrous ring and knock out" than to sell under the hammer. On February 2nd, the day after the emerald squabble was over, and the judge had expressed his concurrence with the verdict of the jury, a lady called on me, and I showed her a single emerald ring which had cost £4,412 in Bond Street, and she immediately declared it was not so fine and large as the single emerald I had sold at auction for £5,000 for her. I agreed, and was reminded that practically every big jeweller around had seen hers, and the highest cash offer over the counter was £3,000.

Silver, too, at my sales has produced extraordinary prices, and has over and over again reached five-and-a-half times as much as offers made over the counter.

I am quite prepared to pay prompt cash to those who prefer it—the highest sum yet paid out in banknotes by me at Piccadilly was £22,500 for a single row of pearls.

For a fee of 21s. my trusted colleagues will call, and in about thirty minutes impart all the information they can about your treasures and their present cash values. What is more, WE GET THE PRICES at our weekly auction sales. Write and ask them to call.

BRITWELL COURT AND POWIS CASTLE LIBRARIES

THE dispersal of the Britwell Court library, which began some years ago, continues. Formed, as we may remind our readers, by Mr. William Henry Miller of Craigentinny, Midlothian, it was one of the finest private libraries in the kingdom. As a book collector, Miller was the successor of the great book fancier, Richard Heber, and many of the rarest works from the library of the latter passed into Britwell Court. From time to time the collection has also been added to by Miller's heirs, by purchase at public auctions and by acquisition from other private libraries.

The outstanding feature of the forthcoming sale is the large number of examples of early English literature in excellent condition and of extreme rarity, nearly all confined to the sixteenth century. Over fifty works are either quite unique or are so scarce that not more than one or two other copies are known.

The general reader may well be curious to ascertain how it has happened that so many books which may be said to fill gaps in our literature have become so difficult to obtain in their original issues, and, not unnaturally, asks what destructive agency has brought about this condition of things.

In the sixteenth century the publication of a book was regarded with grave suspicion. Book censorship had just been introduced and was in full activity. As early as 1515 an Act of Parliament was passed in Scotland which forbade the issue of any books in Latin or English until duly examined by a competent authority, and a little later in England decrees were formulated, first against those who attacked the Pope and then against those who favoured him, and many books were condemned to be burnt. So severe were the proclamations in the reign of Mary that even those who merely possessed books were liable to be treated as rebels. "The history of our country," says Mr. J. A. Farrer, "since the days of printing is exactly reflected in its burnt literature, and so little has the public fire been any respecter of class or dignity, that no branch of intellectual activity has failed to contribute some author whose work or works has been consigned to the flames." The book fires of this period consumed much of the work of England's best known writers, which has consequently quite disappeared. History does not record with certainty the name of the first book to be burnt, but it is generally supposed to be Tyndale's version of the Gospels, destroyed in defiance of Wolsey by order of the bishops. In Elizabeth's reign book burning was not quite so common, but the list is still a long one and included not only heretical works, but poetical effusions supposed to be of a licentious tendency. Kings and Queens, Archbishops and universities, all held book fires, the destruction being often complete. Archbishop Whitgift in particular, in 1599, cleansed the Stationers' Hall by fire of many poetical works, among them Cutwode's "Caltha Poetarum or the Bumble Bee" (No. 185 in the catalogue), a fantastic poem of 187 stanzas about a bee and a marigold, which Farrer says "deserved the fire for its insipidity." This judgment is probably unduly severe and, apart from their value as "belles lettres," there is no doubt that these remnants give us an insight into the literature of the sixteenth century, and in so far as they help us to understand what our forefathers read and appreciated they still deserve our attention.

Another reason why these books are so scarce is that the editions were small, many of them being mere pamphlets sold at a cheap rate, passing from hand to hand, and liable to destruction, while a few were very popular and were quickly worn out. Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress" is a typical example. It was read and re-read and fingered and thumbed out of existence. The same is probably true of Nicholas Breton (1564–1623) and Michael Drayton (1561–1631), of whom there are in this sale many unique editions. There are several others of whose lives and activities we know little, but who wrote poems that have a place in our literature, and that the student cannot ignore. The most notable of these is Richard Barnfield (1574–1627), now the acknowledged author of the ode "The Nightingale," for a long time attributed to Shakespeare, printed in the "Passionate Pilgrim" in 1599.

Barnfield, a student of Brasenose College, took his degree in 1592 after a rather chequered career at the University, being, apparently, "sent down" for some misdemeanour. On payment of a fine, however, he was restored to favour. After leaving the University he published three volumes of poetry, of which one of extreme rarity, "Cynthia with Certaine Sonnets, and the Legend of Cassandra," is now offered to the highest bidder. The writer, in the Dictionary of National Biography, says that "it is only of late that something like justice has been done to the great poetical qualities of Barnfield," and suggests that he had personal relations with Shakespeare.

Two other poets, who flourished at the same time and whose unique works will arouse competition, are names unknown to the modern world, Robert Parry and David Gwyn. Our great dictionary does not know the dates of their birth or death. Parry's little book was found when the sensational "find" was made at Lamport Hall, the seat of Sir Charles Isham, in 1869. The discovery of these literary gems was made by Mr. Charles Edmonds of the firm of Sotheran and Co. While he was engaged in examining the library his eyes fell on a small parchment-covered volume amid a heap of valueless books. On opening it he found a number of unknown poems of the existence of which no one had guessed. (A splendid example of the expert's flair!) The Ishams appear to have been great friends of the Barkers, the Queen's printers. A Mr. John Isham married a Miss Barker, and it is probably due to the intimacy between the families that the Ishams became possessed of these works. Mr. Barker no doubt brought them from town when on a visit to his country seat and presented them to his relatives, who would gladly receive the latest books in demand in the city.

A poetical tract also emanating from the Lamport Hall collection, and also a unique exemplar, is Rogers' "Celestiall Elegies of the Goddesses and Muses de-deploring the death of the Ladie Fraunces Countesse of Hereford, 1598." No mention was apparently made of it by any bibliographer or biographer until it was edited and reprinted for the Roxburghe Club in 1884. The original is now to be sold. There are some interesting allusions scattered through the sonnets, and we find the expressions, "seas of troubles" and "acting a part upon the worldly stage," which recur in almost identical forms in "Hamlet," to which the date usually assigned is not earlier than 1602. One of these quatorzains reads:

What doleful diapason shall I make,
What mournfull songs of sorrow shall I sing,
What comfort in sweete musicke can I take,
Sith death hath broke this Ladies vitall string;
My sacred Lyre that did resound of yore,
Celestiall harmony, like Phoebus Lute,
Such joyfull accents now shall sound no more,
For inward sorrow makes our comfort mute;
Sith death hath broke that string that did unite
In mutuall love her bodie and her soule,
My dulcimers shall make no more delight
And I will live in everlasting dole.
For how can musicke solace humaine cares,
When strings are broke and harts are drowned in tears.

LONDON
Printed by Thomas Creede, for Richard Oliue. 1599.

Title page of "Caltha Poetarum or The Bumble Bee," 1599. This book was suppressed and condemned to be burnt; only three other copies are known.

Among the Lamport Hall treasures is also a copy of the "Hero and Leander" (No. 129) of Marlowe and Chapman. The former wrote the first two sections and the latter finished the poem, here and there inserting a trite saying or a moral sentiment such as the following:

Love is a golden bubble full of dreams
Which waking breaks and fills us with extreames.

A curious little group of books on women demonstrates the everlasting discussion on their merits and demerits. The most notable to be sold is Edward Gosynhyll's "The prayse of all women called Mulierum pean, 1569." It is a recantation of an ungallant attack on women made by him in a poem entitled the "School-house of women" (1542), which roused Robert Vaughan (No. 689) to write his "A dyalogue defensyve for women against malycyous detractoures" (1542), an alliterative poem, and later on, in 1569, excited C. Pyrrie to compose "The praise and dispraise of women" (No. 549).

A very rare book of perhaps greater literary interest, John Bodenham's "Politeuphia, the Wit's Commonwealth" (No. 65), 1598, of which only three or four other copies are recorded, is one of the earliest English anthologies containing a collection of epigrams and verses of the most popular pieces of the period.

Other books in the catalogue illustrate the life and manners of the time: Dekker's "Bellman of London," 1616 (No. 209), a title afterwards changed to "English Villanies," gives a description of low life in James I's reign, its gamblers, thieves and corner-boys. It is also provided with a slang dictionary, the first of its kind in England.

One little work with an attractive title page cut in wood, "The Castell of Pleasure," written, it is said, by Nevil, son of Lord Latimer and printed by Wynkyn de Worde, must be included in this short survey. Desire, beauty and the castle of pleasure are represented on the title page, where the subject matter is also given: "The conveyance of a dreme how Desyre

The Britwell Court sale is to be followed on March 20th by the sale of the valuable library of the Earl of Powis, which contains a miscellaneous collection of books. A large proportion are classics, the most notable being two splendid Ciceros (Nos. 65 and 67); the first has a remarkable Grolier binding in a fine state of preservation and, strange to say, not mentioned in the Grolier Club's catalogue; the second, a beautiful copy of "De officiis et paradoxa," printed on vellum by Johann Fust and Peter Schöffer in 1465, and the first book in which Greek type was used. The whole of the third day's sale is to be devoted to the sale of the productions of the Aldine Press, the majority of which are also works of Latin and Greek authors; but we must not omit to allude to the Dante, "Le terze rime," 1502, printed on vellum (No. 387), with an elegant title page and two lovely full-page miniatures of Dante meeting a leopard, a lion and a wolf in the wood with Virgil, and Virgil presenting Dante to Cato, the guardian of Purgatory. This book is the first book in which the familiar Aldine anchor was used and the first octavo edition of Dante.

But to many the really attractive items in the Powis catalogue are the books on Welsh history, language and literature, two or three of them of the utmost rarity. Welshmen should make a very special effort to buy these for their National Library. Indeed, we cannot imagine patriotic Welshmen allowing this opportunity to be lost. This little group, not more than fifteen or sixteen, contains some quite unique books: Kelton's "Commendacion of Welshmen," 1546 (No. 145), of which the writer in the Dictionary of National Biography states that it is written in praise of Welshmen and that "no copy seems now accessible"; Daniel Powel's "Love of Wales," 1616 (No. 259), a pageant performed at Ludlow in honour of Charles, Prince of Wales; and William Salisbury's two works, "Dictionary in Englyshe and Welshe," 1547 (No. 284), and "Introduction teaching how to pronounce the letters in the Brytish tongue," 1567 (No. 285); of the former a note in the sale catalogue says that it is "one of the three earliest printed Welsh books."

On turning over the catalogue we find a sprinkling of other rare items which rouse our envy, as, for instance, Gascoigne's "A delicate diet for daintie-mouthde Droonkardes," 1576 (No. 101); Heywood's "Dialogue conteinyng the nomber in effect of all the proverbes in the englishe tongue," 1546 (No. 117), and lastly a series of letters by Pryce Hughes from South Carolina, 1713 (No. 12), to the Duchesses of Powis and others. These Americana will excite competition between Americans and Welshmen, dealing as they do with the founding of a Welsh colony in Carolina.

CHINESE ARMORIAL PORCELAIN

PICTURES AND DRAWINGS.

THE Frederick Arthur Crisp collection of Chinese armorial porcelain will be disposed of by Messrs. Puttick and Simpson at 47, Leicester Square on March 8th and 9th. It is composed entirely of armorial pieces sent to this country from China in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries in response to orders from wealthy families. The great extent of the collection shows how widespread the fashion was. In an article on "Armorial Porcelain and Ruby-back Dishes" in COUNTRY LIFE, May 20th, 1922, Mr. R. L. Hobson shows the great value of this kind of porcelain, of which the date can be calculated by the alliances and quarterings, in dating other varieties of Chinese porcelain, with illustrations from the large series in the British Museum. In addition to this there is the heraldic interest and the great beauty of the specimens, the design of the earlier examples being particularly fine.

Many of the pieces in the present collection were derived from the sale of armorial porcelain, the property of J. J. Howard, Maltravers Herald Extraordinary, at Puttick and Simpson's, June 23rd, 1902. While it contains specimens with the arms of the Bakers' Company and the Clothworkers' Company of London, the area over which it was distributed was wide. It embraces pieces with the arms of the Earl of Donegal and Pitt, Baron Londonderry, the Mackintosh, Mackenzie, Macfarlane and other Scottish chieftains, but the bulk of it is relative to English families. Important specimens were ordered for the English families of Chase, Chadwick (a plate from the same service is in the British Museum), Fly, Fortescue, Baron Howard of Effingham, Earl of Rochford, Leveson-Gower, Harley, Earl of Oxford, etc. The brilliancy of the porcelain, the simple strong colours in the armorial bearings, which in themselves are decorative, and the exquisitely painted motifs of floral or other ornament render the armorial porcelain dish a thing of rare beauty and distinction.

On March 9th pictures and drawings from Canford Manor, the property of Lord Wimborne, will be sold at Christie's. Formed chiefly by the advice of Sir Henry Layard, the collection contains many pictures well known from exhibition and description; for instance, those by Dosso Dossi, Ortolano or one of his disciples, and others of the early Italian school. The various Continental schools are well represented by an array of famous names, while of the British school we have Crome, Lely, Jackson and Sir Joshua Reynolds—an ideal collection for a country house. To the sale has been added the private collection of pictures formed by the late Mr. Asher Wertheimer, strong in the Dutch schools with Teniers, Van Ostade and the superb Jan Weenix, "Dead game in a garden"; while of modern pictures there are "The Road through the Valley," by Wilson Steer, 1906, and a pair of panels by T. S. Cooper. The sale concludes with a small collection of drawings belonging to the late Frederick Locker Lampson and from different properties.

Earlier, on February 28th, Messrs. Christie will sell English and foreign silver, being part of the Wertheimer private collection and from various sources. About two o'clock there will be put up a silver toilet service of the George I period that once belonged to the Czar Alexander I of Russia, and bears the monogram of his mother, Princess Mary of Würtemberg. On March 1st they will sell the Wertheimer furniture and porcelain, with additions from different owners, and on the following day the remaining works of the late Alfred Parsons, with modern pictures and drawings, the property of Mrs. Edith Johnson, Liverpool, and from other sources.

The first portion of the very famous collection of engravings, drawings, broadsides and other matter illustrating the topography, architecture and social history of London and its environs, from the earliest times to the present, which was formed by the late John Edward Gardner and sold by his son to the late Sir Edward Coates, Bart., will come under the hammer at Messrs. Sotheby's on February 26th and four following days. On March 2nd they will sell early works of art, pottery and stoneware, a small collection of ship models, a Gothic credence and hutch, Jacobean and late Stuart furniture, a set of Kent chairs covered in Genoa velvet and a pair of early seventeenth century Flemish tapestries.

Paris during the latter years of the eighteenth century, and just before the Revolution, was not a particularly inspiring place for a great artist. But for the delineator of refined genre, to the Bouchers and Lancrets and the followers of Watteau, it was a never-failing stimulus, and no mode of expressing its delightful triviality and superficial elegance is better than the sketch. In the drawing by Gabriel and Augustin de Saint-Aubin, "La parade chez Nicolet," this is borne out. It shows, in a charming fashion, tout le monde flocking to the Theatre Nicolet built by the manager of that name (1710–96) in the Boulevard du Temple, where revues and topical burlesques were performed. Gabriel de St. Aubin, one of several artist brothers, is one of the most original artists in whom the influence of Gravelot and Eisen may be traced; for years he strove to fetter himself, to produce historical pieces for the Prix de Rome, to which he never got nearer than second. Bohemian and mercurial, however, the life of Paris was his true subject, and two exquisite sketches, this one and a "Review of Troops," are included among the ten very important eighteenth century drawings being dispersed at Sotheby's on March 22nd. The "Parade" was brought to its present state of completion by Augustin after his brother's death in 1780, from whose unaided brush is a charming candlelight scene in gouache of a lady at a harpsichord with a gentleman, fiddle in hand, waiting to join in. Three landscapes by Hubert Robert, the exact contemporary of Augustin de St. Aubin, show the slightly Piranesian eye of that master, and there are a pair of very lovely Guardi views in pen and bistre of Venice. The two remaining lots to be sold then are a Boucher sketch of a sleeping girl in chalk on blue paper, and a sheet of studies by Lancret for his famous picture, "Le Déjeuner de Jambon," in red chalk.

FURTHER STEPS TOWARDS PERFECTION

LAST week we concluded our notes upon the improvement which is possible even in the best of cars with a few words with regard to the irritating effect of that periodic vibration to which quite a number of modern engines are subject in great or less degree. The effect is manifest mainly in rattles that refuse to be subdued at certain critical speeds; but this is by no means the most serious aspect of the matter, although it is the one that most immediately concerns the motorist. Vibration, according to its nature and intensity, is more or less inimical to longevity; and to generalise, one may say that both the durability and the reliability of a car and its engine as a whole, and of each individual part, are in inverse ratio to the amount of vibration generated by any part of the vehicle when in motion.

CENTRE BEARING NECESSARY.

Now periodic vibration may be due to a variety of causes, into which we do not feel disposed to enter, but as likely as not it is caused by crank-shaft whip, due again to insufficient support of this comparatively long, awkwardly shaped and rapidly revolving mass. If the crank-shaft were perfectly balanced, whip would not matter so much, would not occur, possibly; and conversely, if the shaft were adequately supported, a trifling lack of balance would not be so vital a matter. Time was when a four-cylinder engine of the highest class was given five main bearings, but the practice of equipping it with end bearings only became increasingly common, presumably from motives of economy. Some designers even to-day cannot see that while these are the two extremes, there is a happy mean. They cannot afford, nor do they think it necessary, to run to five bearings; but they cannot see that a centre bearing would probably make all the difference in the world to the behaviour of their engines without greatly increasing the cost of production.

A SAFETY DEVICE.

We mentioned the matter of the safety factor in regard to four-wheel braking; in view of an experience which once befell us the point is worthy of elaboration. We were proceeding westwards along the Cromwell Road, which, as most London motorists will be aware, runs to a dead end at its junction with Earl's Court Road. The car was a large six-cylinder vehicle, capable of high speed and rapid acceleration. Within a few hundred yards of the junction of roads we became conscious that the speed was increasing unduly, and instantly released the pressure on the accelerator. Nothing happened; or rather, the speed continued to increase and the Earl's Court Road loomed perilously near. As the engine raced with the clutch out, we put the side brake hard on, leant forward and switched off and all was well. All this occupied perhaps two seconds; a third second would have meant catastrophe. Examination showed that the throttle connection had come adrift at the carburettor, and that although the accelerator pedal felt all right, actually it was doing no work. A stop of a minute sufficed to put matters right, but we could not help feeling that an arrangement of the throttle valve in the induction pipe, so that in the event of such an accident the suction of the engine would tend to close the valve, would be a great advantage. This contretemps taught us to appreciate another point also—the advantage of placing the engine switch in a position where it can be snapped off by the driver at an instant's notice.

This, of course, is not a matter which one can write down as a just cause of complaint against the manufacturers; it is moreover one which the amateur can easily put right for himself. All that is wanted is a light spring pulling on the throttle lever at the carburettor, so that in the unlikely event of anything going wrong with the hand or foot control, the tendency will be for the valve to close.

SIMPLIFYING LUBRICATION.

Chassis lubrication, however, is a fruitful and perfectly just source of complaint. It is absurd that at this advanced stage in the development of the car as a whole an owner should have to grovel beneath the car with an oil can or a grease gun in order to reach obscure but vital parts. The grease gun, of course, is a great improvement on the old grease cup, but surely, if the self-lubricating bearings of which a good deal has been heard in America have not yet reached a stage of efficiency sufficient to justify their adoption over here, the greasing points could be brought either to one common point or at least to accessible positions

Further Testimony to

The Lanchester 40 h.p. Car

"I am tremendously impressed by the manifold advantages of your 40 h.p. over any other Car of repute. I could write pages enumerating these in detail, but will content myself with mentioning a few which have struck me more forcibly:

Economy of Petrol—I got an average of between 15 and 16 miles to the gallon.

The extraordinary apparent gathering of speed when climbing. Without any acceleration whatever, the Car appears automatically to increase her speed when tackling a gradient, and always gives the impression when climbing of having plenty of reserve in hand.

The splendid springing, and the way the Car holds the road, which enables one to drive with perfect comfort and safety at high speeds over the roughest roads.

I must congratulate your firm on the production of such a magnificent Car, as I am continually congratulating myself as the possessor. She is a joy to handle, and quite spoils one for any other makes."

The testimony printed here is an extract from a letter received from a delighted owner of a Lanchester 40 h.p. Car. The complete letter too long for our space, deals with a tour in Scotland covering 2,500 miles without the slightest trouble. The owner particularly emphasizes his delight in the manner in which the Car, a heavy Limousine, negotiated a very difficult climb, which, according to local information, had never before been accomplished by a Car with a similar type body.

When choosing your Car let the experience of others be your guide. Our booklet, "Owners' Opinions," of the Lanchester 40 h.p. Car is full of such testimony as the above extract. Will you write for a copy; you will find it interesting.

behind traps in the valance? The actual driving gear should not need attention, since gear box, universal joints and rear axle gear should be one unit joined for lubrication purposes by the propeller shaft casing or torque tube. There are, unfortunately, numerous other points—gear shift sliding tubes, brake lever bearings, pedal shafts and so on—which cannot be run in an oil bath in this fashion, but one would imagine that some form of wick feed from a common reservoir could be arranged, just as the sixteen or more shackle pin bearings, needing the same kind and quantity of lubricant at the same intervals could be fed by a common injection from the grease gun.

An accessory which falls into much the same category as the shock absorber is the extra air valve. The advantage of its use is admitted; that it will improve the operation of the most perfectly automatic of carburettors (perfection in this respect being a relative term), is not denied. Yet only a very few manufacturers embody a mixture regulator, or extra air valve in their original design. The same applies to the air strangler, which cuts off whatever air is normally admitted to the carburettor, and is used for starting purposes only. It would seem that these two devices might easily be combined in one fitting, so designed that with the controlling lever in the half-way position the amount of air would be normal, and ranging to a maximum of "extra air" in one direction down to a complete strangling of supply in the other.

Extra air valves and stranglers are easily purchased and easily fitted; but one feels that such essential items should not be regarded as accessories. They should be allowed for in the design of the engine in order to secure the most satisfactory positioning.

THE ACCESSORY QUESTION.

The accessory question which we have now touched upon is a wide one, and the problem of what should be a part of the car's original "complete" equipment and what can be legitimately left to the owner to purchase is not easy to settle. Roughly one would say that any article that is essential should be included in the purchase price of the car. An extra air valve is essential to most efficient operation; a petrol gauge is essential to care-free motoring. Yet seldom is a gauge fitted, at any rate, to British cars; seldom is it combined with a sensible two-way tap giving communication between the carburettor and two pipes dipping into the main tank at two different levels, thus supplying the equivalent of a reserve tank for emergency use only; and still more seldom is the gauge and two-way tap fitted where it can be seen and used without a journey round the car.

These things also we regard as essentials, just as good tools are essential. But good tools are not always supplied. All too frequently, indeed, the contents of the tool roll—itself probably a wretched affair of cheap canvas—have every appearance of being hammers, files, adjustable wrenches, double-ended spanners, screwdrivers and so forth—until they are used! Then they turn out to be little better than toys. The box spanners and their tommy bar are particularly bad offenders; so, too, is the spare wheel brace, which, being made of soft metal, soon burrs over and ruins also the corners of the nuts it is intended to turn. A good car is surely worthy of a good tool kit. Cost of production—that universal scapegoat for deficiencies and inefficiencies—is doubtless to blame, but there cannot be a great deal of difference in price between the indifferent articles usually supplied and a good set, when bought upon the favourable terms open to an automobile manufacturer.

A SECOND SPARE WHEEL.

It is rather a question whether a second spare wheel can be regarded as an "essential" that should be supplied as a part of the standard equipment, but at least it often proves a great blessing, and every motorist purchasing a new car is well advised to specify two spare wheels, even though he has to pay extra. Similarly, an engine-operated tyre pump is by way of being a luxury; but if the original tool kit contained a really good pump, as, unfortunately, it usually does not, the difference between this and a Pioneer or Engoflater, which allows the engine to do the work, would be of small moment to either manufacturer or purchaser. Some few cars are originally equipped with a power compressor, and this is doubtless the best system of all; but the day is past for the old crude hand inflation of any but the lightest tyres, and some form of mechanical pump certainly should be included in the equipment, as an "extra," if need be.

SWIVELLING SIDE LAMPS.

Something in the way of an inspection lamp is also an essential, and although one can scarcely go on piling up the extras at the manufacturer's expense, every car should be fitted with some form of detachable lamp, that can be used anywhere within reasonable range in the case of trouble at night. An easy way out of the difficulty, so far as the engine is concerned, is the substitution of swivelling side lamps for the usual rigid pattern. These could then be turned inwards and any necessary work performed in comparative comfort. Lamps of this type should be fitted in any case and doubtless in time their use will be general; but the problem is really not solved unless an inspection lamp with a long flex, coiling on a spring drum, such as is fitted to certain spot lights, be carried.

To return to the question of tyres, the use of detachable wheels has relieved the motorist of a certain amount of labour, but he who ventures forth secure in the belief that his tyre troubles will be limited to one, or two, is an incurable optimist. The time will come when a second or third puncture or burst will destroy his beautiful faith. He will then realise that the removal of a cover from the rim is no more easy than ever it was, and having had a run of good luck he will have forgotten most of the tricks for persuading a recalcitrant cover to leave or return to the rim that, maybe, once he knew and often practised. He will ask, as we do now, why on earth cars are not provided with split or otherwise easily detachable rims as well as detachable wheels. Some cars are so provided, but, alas, very few.

THE LUGGAGE QUESTION.

Finally, since, although the list of possible improvements is by no means exhausted, the space at our disposal unfortunately is, we may turn to the question of luggage. A "completely equipped" car does not usually carry a luggage grid at the rear, and its equipment does not include a spare petrol can carrier. Both, however, are undoubtedly essentials and can be fitted best and most economically when the car is in the making. The luggage question is usually a difficult one, and unless a grid be used, not only the running-boards but a good deal of the rear passenger space is filled with suit cases, spare coats, and odds and ends, to the great discomfort of the passengers and at the risk of damaging paint or upholstery.

The luggage carrier need not be an elaborate or expensive affair. We were on one occasion quoted £8 for the fitting of a simple grid, a job that, in our opinion at the time should not have cost more than £2. On principle, but to our ultimate regret, we refused the offer. Anyway, a very few pounds should buy the kind of grid we have in mind, if the manufacturer does not fit it. It should be either a folding affair or one that is instantly detachable by slacking off two nuts, such as the carrier fitted to Standard cars.

The petrol can carrier should not be either unsightly or elaborate—just a rectangular rim on the running board that is almost invisible when the spare can is in position. Incidentally, it behoves one to obtain a can that is in good condition and have it painted to match the car if the owner sets any store by appearance.

A little refinement that, so far as we know, no manufacturer provides would be a simple bracket under the bonnet to carry a quart can of oil. The sump of the engine holds a goodly supply as a rule, but it is just possible to be so situated—on a Sunday in the wilds of Dartmoor, or Scotland, for instance—that the possession of a reserve supply would be appreciated.

ON UNOBTRUSIVENESS

THERE always has been, and there always will be presumably, at least an undercurrent of complaint as to the manner in which motor cars are driven. The "old-timer" knows that often the road-hog is merely a silly-season subject; he knows, also, that there is some little basis for the complaints one reads and hears. There are black sheep in every flock: bad drivers in our midst; and where ninety and nine considerate motorists pass unnoticed, the passage of but one inconsiderate driver is an occasion for much wailing and gnashing of teeth.

The cultivation of an open mind is by no means bad advice. Because one is a motorist one should not say that all drivers are good drivers; because one is not a motorist it is unreasonable to believe that there are none but bad drivers. The fact of the matter is there are good and bad; and with the ever more rapidly growing use of the ever more easily controlled car, the mass, if not the proportion, of poor drivers becomes more obtrusive.

I hold that there are few motorists of either sex who are bad—in the public acceptation of the term—deliberately, selfishly, or knowingly, but that there are very many who err from sheer ignorance. One does not drive a car with the mere mechanical ability adequately to control the various levers; one drives with one's head—and, if one be wise, with one's heart. Ability to control the mechanism may be acquired in a week or a month by nearly anyone; the complete road sense, however, is intuitive, and while it may be developed by constant use of the road, it may never be acquired. The old cyclist or horse-driver may or may not be temperamentally equipped for car-driving; but if he be, the week or month of practice with the new vehicle at the new speeds will see the finished product. On the other hand, the youngster whose car is his—or very likely her—first road vehicle has it all to learn.

Is it remarkable, therefore, that one sees committed daily breaches of the most elementary rules of good driving that have much the same effect upon the practised good driver as would a dropped "h" from the Woolsack upon a noble member of the Upper House.

TWO GOLDEN RULES.

There are two golden rules—cultivate unobtrusiveness; never be in a hurry. Undue haste saves seconds; maintained over a long journey the economy, at best, runs to minutes; at worst, haste loses hours. It destroys the appreciation of the journey, causes mental worry, and reduces the efficiency of the driver and, indirectly, of the machine. By "never hurry" I do not mean never drive fast.

En Route to You—

This illustration of a corner of the great Llandarcy Refinery shows the first stage of the journey of the finished "BP" Motor Spirit to your car.

These rail-tank cars carry "BP" to every part of the Kingdom. Wherever a motorist can take his car he is sure to see the familiar Union Jack sign indicating that he can get a supply of the "Best Possible." And always he can be certain that it is clean, uniform and of the finest quality.

To achieve and maintain this universal distribution of "BP" an immense organization has been built up, and this organization is the best guarantee to the British motorist of the constancy and purity of his supply of spirit.

"BP" is the only entirely British Petrol—British in every stage from the Crude Oil well to the familiar Khaki Can.

Speed by all means if you want to, but let it be because you want to, as distinct from because you have got to. When time is a consideration—as, of course, it very often is—it is the steady speed that gets one there; bursts of maximum, followed by a long delay to replace a tyre ruined through cornering at an excessive speed, and followed again by high pace and a driver flustered by the fear that he will be late, are only too likely to end in accidents.

The flustered driver going all out is, perhaps, so busy holding his car to the road that he fails to notice the screened side-turning—which is, as it happens, the only cross road in fifty miles that holds a horse and cart ready to draw out upon the high road. Normally, the pace of the car would allow of either retardation or acceleration to clear the obstacle. Maximum speed is too great to permit of sufficient braking; and, obviously, there is no reserve by which to accelerate. All the onus of avoiding an accident is therefore thrown on the driver of the relatively uncontrollable horse—always supposing that the already flustered motorist does not lose his head and run off the road beforehand.

KEEP A RESERVE.

This is a terrible and maybe exaggerated picture that I am drawing, but I want to emphasise the necessity for running always with a bit in hand, so that one can either decelerate or accelerate at an instant's notice. There are plenty of opportunities of going all out when one wants to for the sheer love of speed; but for the bulk of a journey that "bit in hand" is all-important.

Unobtrusiveness, it need hardly be said, is the keynote of good driving and of the good motorist. Neither an open exhaust nor mauve and orange paintwork is particularly contributory to the pleasures of the countryside. A noisy gear change is no worse than hooting a clear road through a narrow village street. "Boggling" a manœuvre in a strange garage is less criminal than choking with dust or spattering with mud a party of pedestrians—whether or not they be decked out in their Sunday best, but still more particularly in the latter case.

Remember: Ninety-nine good drivers pass unnoticed; the hundredth, a bad driver, brings odium on the name of automobilism. Bad driving consists of unnecessary use of the horn just as much as it does of unskilful use of the gear lever; of noisy progress past a church during the hours of worship; of pulling up or changing direction without warning; of overtaking another car when a third vehicle is travelling towards one, especially when the third car is toiling uphill; of forcing a passage through a crowd of would-be or ex-tram-passengers.

THE "ENGINE SENSE."

Bad driving, it seems, is composed largely of small misdemeanours. The big things one need not mention, since they are dictated by sheer recklessness. It does not require much intelligence, for instance, to realise that to race over a blind cross road is dangerous. This and similar matters are obvious to all; but if the novice will only keep his—and particularly her—eyes open, many incidents arise in every run where a little consideration may be given to the feelings, physical and mental, of others; incidents which will illustrate the difference between good and bad driving once and for all far more effectively than can many columns of print.

With regard to the mechanical side of the question, I deliberately underestimated the skill required to control a car, since it is of lesser importance, and with the growing simplicity of automobile control this is a habit of mind which one is rather apt to adopt. As a matter of fact, however, while there are some people, quite unmechanically minded in general, who pick up the rudiments of the art very quickly, there are others to whom, apparently, decent driving is impossible, no matter how long and often they practise. Gear changing, "feeling" a car round a greasy bend, and such matters, call for a delicacy of touch and an intuitive sense of the requirements that are as temperamental and incapable of acquisition by those who do not possess them as is the "road sense."

Home tests for the driver, therefore, are contained in the questions: Do you feel for and with both your engine and for other road users? Do you instinctively sense what the engine requires before it wants it, and what pedestrians and animals are going to do before they do it?

If you do, you have the makings of a good driver in you. If you do not—there's no hope! R. W. B.

The Resources Behind the Car.

ANYONE at present contemplating the purchase of a motor car would be ill advised if he failed to consider what may be called the resources behind it, by which we mean the manufacturing plant and the maker's financial stability and reputation. There are on the market at the present time several cars thoroughly sound and satisfactory in themselves, sometimes, indeed, almost excellent, but unfortunately emanating from factories that rest on what may be safely, if figuratively, described as foundations of sand. A car like one of these may give every satisfaction to its owner, or it may not; but in either case, if and when the need arises for spare parts, or if the car comes to be sold, the unfortunate owner too often finds that the manufacturers take not the slightest interest in their productions once the cars have left their factory and the cheque for them has been

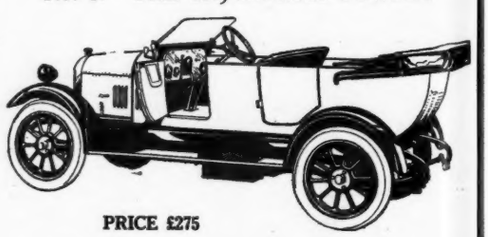
Morris Cars

No. 1. THE 11.9 MORRIS-COWLEY

"The Car you buy to keep"



PRICE £275

THIS is, perhaps, the most interesting of all the 1923 Morris Cars—not because it is essentially a better car than any of the other Models (all 11.9 Morris engines and chassis are identical), but because it costs so little to buy.

With a luxury equipment of Lucas Dynamotor Starter-lighting set, 3 12-volt lamps, Smith Speed-indicator and 8-day Clock, 5 Wheels fitted with Dunlop Cord Tyres, Oil and Petrol Gauges, Wefco Spring Gaiters and Enots Pump Chassis Lubrication, the price is £275—a figure which would have seemed impossible in 1914, the "cut-price" year. Needless to say, this is, like all Morris Cars, an "IMSHI"—the Car which set a New Standard for its Class.

This is the first time you have been able to buy a Rich Man's Car at a Poor Man's Price.

Other prices:—from £225 to £390, for Two-seaters, Four-seaters (All-weathers) and Coupés in the 11.9 and 13.9 Series.

cleared; and a potential purchaser of a second-hand car may be fully aware that the depreciation of such a vehicle is much greater than it would be were the reputation behind it of a higher standard.

Recently, we had the pleasure of inspecting some of the factories where Bean cars or their components are made, and in one respect at least these factories and their resources render the car almost unique among British productions. More manufacturing processes are conducted under the control of the makers of the car in the case of the Bean than in the case of any other car that we know. Thus, the steel comes from Messrs. Hadfields, Limited, of Sheffield, who are closely associated with Messrs. A. Harper, Sons and Bean, Limited; there are two very fine forging plants at Smethwick on the outskirts of Birmingham; at Tipton there is a foundry where all iron castings are made, and adjoining the foundry is one of the largest and best equipped chassis factories that is to be found anywhere in Great Britain. In this factory the most modern methods of production are employed, although it is hardly fair to apply to the cars the much abused term of mass production. Rather should it be called quantity or batch production. Thus, the latest machines and the most economical for every type of work are in use, such as the conveyor system, by which the assembly of a chassis is begun at one end of a moving track and completed at the other, the various components being fed to the hands of the workers at the side of the track just at those points where the chassis is ready for their reception. In and among the wonderful automatic machines are tracks consisting of rollers mounted on bearings, so that heavy components placed on one of these tracks may be pulled along by hand with hardly any effort on the part of the workmen, the saving in time and so in cost being obvious.

On completion, and after preliminary testing round the firm's own testing track, the chassis are taken over to the Dudley works, where bodies are made and the cars are completed. As an example of perfect manufacturing organisation, it would be difficult to conceive of anything better than these Bean establishments, whether considered individually or as components of a skilfully directed whole.

As an example of the detail organisation may be quoted the fact that every batch of raw material and any component made from that batch may be traced right through the factory and into the car into which it is finally assembled. Thus, should trouble develop on any car, all other parts made or being made from the same batch of raw material as that which has proved faulty may be stopped in their progress through the factory, or if any have already been built into cars those cars may be traced to their owners and recalled for replacement of the potentially faulty part.

It may be useful if we devote a word to the removal of a misunderstanding that exists on the relationship between A. Harper, Sons and Bean, Limited, and Harper Bean, Limited. It will be remembered that soon after the end of the war a huge combine was formed, consisting of some half a dozen motor car manufacturers and several manufacturers of components and of raw materials. The largest single constituent of the group was A. Harper, Sons and Bean, Limited, a firm whose history dates from 1826—its early activities, by the way, having been the manufacture of guns and shells, so that it is unnecessary to indicate the work on which A. Harper, Sons and Bean, Limited, were engaged during the war and to explain how it was that this firm gave a brilliant lead to the rest of our factories engaged on war work. As A. Harper, Sons and Bean, Limited, were the largest car manufacturers of the group, the name Harper Bean, Limited, was taken for the combine. Like many other post-war schemes, this one went agley, and recently A. Harper, Sons and Bean, Limited, have secured the controlling interest in their own establishments once more. Mr. Jack Bean—a brilliant organiser and business man and a worthy son of his father, Sir George Bean—in conjunction with Messrs. Hadfields, Limited, of Sheffield, holds 55 per cent. of the shares of A. Harper, Sons and Bean, Limited, the other 45 per cent. belonging to the Harper Bean Combine. The shares of A. Harper, Sons and Bean, Limited, are all held privately, and the company may be regarded as a private one. A. Harper, Sons and Bean, Limited, is a manufacturing company; Harper Bean, Limited, is a holding company, manufacturing nothing. There is no question of unfriendly relations between the two, but it is advisable that any misunderstanding should be dispelled from the minds of the public.

Fourth International Road Congress.—The arrangements which are being made in connection with the International Road Congress to be held in Seville in May of this year have advanced sufficiently to enable the programme of the Congress to be issued during the current month. The Congress will open on Monday, May 7th, and terminate on Saturday, May 12th. All the reports and papers have now been received, and there is a clear indication that from a road engineer's point of view the value of this Congress will certainly be no less than that of any previous Congress. The conferences for the discussion of these reports, which will be presented by road and traffic experts of various countries, will be held in the mornings, and the local organising committee have arranged for receptions and other functions during the afternoons and evenings.

THE DRESSMAKER'S TAILOR-MADE

THE RAGE FOR THE STRIPED EGYPTIAN SASH AND EASTERN EMBROIDERIES

WITH the passing of the mid-season there is to be observed a decided falling off in favour of the neat, severe, classical tailor-made. Probably this deflection would not have been so noticeable if the latter mode had not been so exceptionally prominent. But from now on it will be relegated to the country and specialised occasions, such as the early race meetings, its place being usurped by the dressmaker's tailor-made of less rigid formality.

Although here and there one sees skirts discreetly draped, by far the most popular jupe is the one with folded-over front, like a kilt without the pleats; and sometimes these are introduced panel-wise either side and pressed very flat. As to the accompanying little coat, the variety is verily bewildering. There is no suggestion of massed production where these are concerned, each model appearing to have some individual distinctive attraction.

With these, too, there is worn the Egyptian striped sash, swathed once or twice round the figure, the ends knotted and falling down the front of the skirt. An enchanting model after this manner was in navy blue repp cloth, the inside seam of the sleeve trimmed with scarlet cloth stitched with small burnished steel discs, a decoration that was repeated at the top of the upstanding straight band collar; the fronts of the little jacket being cut away to reveal a soft blouse of tucked ivory Georgette, fitted with sleeves that at the wrists formed quaint poufs that filled in effectively and picturesquely the vacuum left by the bell-shaped jacket sleeves.

Under the auspices of bright coloured embroideries, applications of Eastern-patterned materials, and the above-mentioned Egyptian sash, black, dark blue and the various shades of brown are likely to be much worn. There is an indescribable air of distinction about a black frock or three-piece, relieved by bold splashes of colour. One recently seen had an apron front attached to a band that buckled at the back and revealed, as the wearer moved, a lining of Persian-patterned material that found itself again in a triangular piece facing back the base of the square-cut bolero fronts. This apron front, by the way, is just as popular for evening as for day dresses, and affords the most delightful opportunities for introducing contrasting fabrics and colours. Also, it may be shifted round to the back, where it will be found exceedingly helpful in counteracting the drawn-in appearance necessitated by the classical swathed draperies which, to certain figures, especially those inclined to embonpoint, are so trying and often frankly unsightly.

A propos of figures, I attended an interesting corset display the other day, and as I watched the mannequins—long, short, medium stout and very stout—walking and sitting with the most consummate ease in the long-hipped belt, which is what the modern corset actually resolves itself into, there was borne in upon me the extraordinarily important part played by these intimate accessories in the correct form of the day.

With, so far as I can recall, two exceptions, the line was absolutely straight from just above the waist to a length calculated to ensure a suppression of the most prominent hips; and this, mark you, without any discomfort or anatomical inaccuracies. The two exceptions referred to above displayed just the merest soupcon of a nip in at the waist, and had been especially designed for the close-fitting bodices that are coming in the wake of the full long skirts.

The outstanding feature, however, of this particular build is the perfectly flat back inserted with ingenious elastic sections which give to every movement, together with the lacings up the front—a theme on which there is worked every conceivable variation, from the infinitesimal elastic top to short shaped backs for the support of too generous a supply of flesh. The display was a revelation of the corset artistry, and must have cheered many a doubting and depressed heart, since age or nature may do their worst only to be circumvented by artifice and skill.

Meanwhile, there is our picture contribution of the week to be considered. This is sufficiently representative of the dressmaker's tailor-made, and reveals one of the latest and newest of coatees, the base being cleverly drawn in round the hips without the assistance of a band. The suggested colour and material are henna brown and repp cloth, with roll-over collar and cuff facings of Armenian patterned silk, or any Eastern embroidered-looking fabric. The fold-over skirt is quite one of the most comfortable for walking ever devised, as the lap is deep enough to allow of the base being left loose without any revelations.

SINGER

THE grotesque appearance which many motorists assume during the winter in their endeavours to protect themselves adequately from the weather whilst motoring, is entirely unnecessary with the new SINGER Models. With the hood up and the side screens in position the car provides all the advantages of a permanently enclosed model, whilst with the hood down the rigid side screens provide complete protection from draught and side winds. If desired the rear side screens can be adjusted to form a V shaped rear screen.

Add these latest improvements to the existing reputation for reliability and service which the SINGER has held since 1912 and you get a car which should recommend itself to all discerning motorists who have the experience to appreciate those points which differentiate between the ordinary run of good cars and the SINGER.

The Coventry Premier 10 h.p. Car now manufactured by the Singer Company is the same engine, chassis, and body as the famous Singer "Ten" but without Electric Starter, Side Curtains, and certain refinements which account for the difference in the price.

SPECIALISTS IN BEDS.

THESE are days when the value to the community of the specialist, whatever his line may be, is very generally recognised. We know that human capacity is limited, and that the man who employs all his energies to one end is better fitted for his work than he who dissipates his energies over a wide field. This is acknowledged with regard to medicine, gardening and other subjects, but not so generally with regard to such matters as decoration and furniture, but it is good sense nevertheless, as the reputation of Messrs. Hoskins and Sewell, Limited, of Birmingham, who specialise in beds, bears witness. Beds for the nursery—charming these are—beds for the ships of the great liner companies, hospital beds, beds for the home, whether of oak or other wood, metal or in white enamel—most dainty and most permanent—whether modern or period in design, beds, in fact, of every sort, are Messrs. Hoskins and Sewell's pre-occupation—beds for all purposes and all parts of beds. One of their latest introductions are beds of seamless steel, by a special process made to appear the exact replicas of modern walnut, oak or mahogany. Among the disadvantages of wood bedsteads is the fact that they are liable to warp, to creak distressingly, or to suffer destruction from the atmosphere or the attacks of wood worm or other insects. And yet in some schemes of furnishing the wooden bed is essential. Messrs. Hoskins and Sewell's new manufactures supply the æsthetic needs and have none of these drawbacks.

CRYSTAL GLASSWARE FOR THE TOILET TABLE.

To a great many people glass has an extraordinary attraction easily to be understood, for its clear and sparkling beauty when well cut is beyond all dispute. Messrs. P. Reeves of 12, Edmund Place, Aldersgate Street, London, specialise in the production of crystal cut glassware of all sorts at prices which are certainly moderate, when the beauty of the articles supplied is considered, and also make a point of keeping a stock of separate parts of all articles so that breakages can readily be replaced. The goods offered cover almost every imaginable article for the table or the house, one of the most charming and useful productions being trinket sets entirely of crystal glass, pleasant in line and ornamentation. The set illustrated here is priced at £5, but both cheaper and dearer sets can be supplied.

FOR WATERTIGHT ROOFING.

Hesitation as to whether leakage is likely to occur deters some people from installing a roof garden, but the system originated by Messrs. D. Anderson and Son, Limited, Park Road Works, Stretford, Manchester, well known as the makers of the "Belfast" roof, entirely does away with any such objection. It consists of layers of specially prepared compressed asphalte laid on to the roof, with a thick coat of asphaltic compound between each, which is applied hot and binds the whole into a solid mass, a further coat being applied on top to protect the roof from injury, and the result is a perfectly water-tight roof, the life of which is only determined by the durability of the supporting timbers. Messrs. Anderson are pleased to supply estimates for such work, and advice.

THE NATIONAL VALUE OF THE GAS UNDERTAKINGS.

At a moment when, in certain quarters, an ill-founded agitation against the use of gas has been set on foot, there is justification for recalling the fact that more than a century's public service, continually improving supply and cheapening cost, is to be credited to the gas industry. A hundred years ago some of the clergy preached against the introduction of gas into churches as "profane and contrary to God's laws," an attitude of mind which provokes a smile from the man or woman of to-day; but even so it is not generally recognised that on this industry a great many others depend. Carbonisation of coal was carried out then merely with the idea of producing gas. To-day almost every other trade or manufacture uses some substance produced in the process. During the war benzol and toluol for the manufacture of high explosives, dyes and motor spirit, sulphate of ammonia, creosote, tar and carbolic were all supplied by the gas undertakings. Gas lime, which the allotment holder valued so highly as a remedy against wire worms, and medicines which meant so much to the wounded as aspirin, phenacetin and antipyrene, all derived from coal tar from the gas works. The supply of nitrogen for the soil, obtained before the war by the importation of nitrate of soda, was carried on during the struggle by the gas works, which produced increased quantities of sulphate of ammonia to be used for the same purpose. Certainly the record of gas during the one hundred and eleven years since it was first used as an illuminant is a very fine one, and few industries are conducted at so high a level of intelligent foresight to meet requirements and increase efficiency.

VAUXHALL

The perfectly - balanced engine of four cylinders

WHEN a four-cylindered engine is perfectly balanced it runs as smoothly as one with six cylinders. Thanks to British inventiveness you can have in the 23-60 h.p. Vauxhall (which is fitted with harmonic balancer invented by Dr. F. W. Lanchester, F.R.S., M.Inst.C.E.) an engine of four cylinders that does run with positive smoothness. This is an important matter to users of high-powered cars.

THEY are offered a machine of the quality they desire at an extra rdinarily low price, because so much is saved in manufacturing cost, with the further advantages of lower running expenses, more body room and simpler mechanism. The price of the 23-60 h.p. Vauxhall chassis is but £695. Full particulars are given in our catalogue, and trial drives may be had by appointment.

THE "DEVON" FIRE

IT IS NOT NECESSARY TO BUILD A NEW HOUSE merely because you want to have Devon fires throughout your home. Scrap your present grates. It is a simple matter to fit DEVON FIRES in their place.

There are SIX EXCELLENT REASONS for doing so: Economy, Appearance, Construction, Labour-Saving, Little Smoke, Easy Fitting. We can only give a full explanation here of one of these reasons. If you are interested in the other five ask your local ironmonger. He is probably a "Devon" Fire enthusiast and will tell you all about them.

Reason No. 4.—LABOUR SAVING
The "Devon" Fire entirely dispenses with the dirty and exhausting labour of blacking grates, polishing fenders or whitening hearths. The only cleaning involved is the removal of the handful of ashes and cinders that remain after use and the relaying of the fire. An occasional rub with a damp cloth keeps the non-absorbent glazed surface of the tiles and briquettes bright and clean. Save your time and avoid unnecessary and uncongenial labour by installing a "Devon" Fire now.

Lalley Light
AND POWER PLANT

THAT attractive country house, bungalow or farm, miles from the reach of any corporation's electric light supply, need not be entirely excluded from your consideration on account of its primitive lighting system. On the contrary; by the simple installation of the Lalley Light and Power Plant, town luxury and that independent "press the button" feeling is yours to enjoy.

This reliable plant, running on either petrol or benzol, occupies merely four feet square floor space. It is suitable for dealing with an average connected load of 80 to 100 lights, with equal lighting efficiency in the lighting of one lamp up to the full hundred.

Beyond comparison, but within the reach of all.

Spring is Calling

A Great Divine has likened Nature to a huge monster which breathes twice a year. It breathes the cold air of Autumn and Winter, and the earth where flowers blossomed is changed by the "silvered glory of frost and snow."

....It breathes the warm breath of Spring and Summer, when softly comes again, "like the winged things of night," the flowers, earth's jewelled spray. Our "Country Life Wear" is built to meet the needs of the seasons. Spring is Calling! If your quest is a bunch of golden daffodils or the lilacs down at Kew, it will add to your enjoyment if you go in one of our Country Life Suits, toned to harmonise with your surroundings.

....For a spanking walk when the air is like wine and the eye delights in grassy uplands reaching to the far horizon, you will want the comfort of our coats of finest Shetland Tweeds, light in weight and cosy as Nature intended.

RECREATION AND THE FUTURE OF THE RACE

It is interesting to note how often the way in which a nation, a sect or a people has taken its recreation has exercised a distinct effect on the moulding of its destiny. History is full of examples, demonstrating (I can see a Puritan uplifting of hands) the racial and political value of strenuous pleasure and healthy frivolity. Nothing has a more fatal effect on the virility of a nation than a lack of the playing instinct. The ancient Greeks danced and played outdoor games all the way up the pleasant slope of their rise to intellectual power and racial eminence, and it was only when their mode of recreation changed, and they discarded their gay and lovely athletics for more intensive intellectual pursuits, and cultivated an exhaustingly superior attitude of mind that recognised no joy or merit in healthy physical play, that decadence began to pull them over the precipice that ended in moral decay and race suicide.

That is one instance, among many, all comforting to the student of history and sociology confronted by our present generation's insatiable appetite for strenuous sport and frivolous dances, and concerned about the national future and the well-being of the race.

ONE END OF THE BEAUTIFUL BALLROOM AT THE CECIL.

He can rest content. The Foxtrot craze (or is it now the Tango ? it is difficult to keep pace with the progress of the changing steps), far from being the menace that our more lugubrious prophets would have us believe, is really a means of national salvation—one of the levers exerted by a beneficent life-force to raise the physical standard of peoples drained and weakened by a long war. We dance in an unconscious effort to resist decay. As long as the bands play, and our feet move irresistibly obedient to them, there is hope for Europe.

The student of history will gather courage, then, from watching the crowds of beautifully-dressed and graceful dancers that nightly move with obvious intense enjoyment across the polished floors of our big hotels and dance clubs, taking heart from their numbers and their enthusiasm, and noting meanwhile the comments of well-known physicians who have been puzzled to account for the increasingly lovely figures and complexions of the present-day town-dwelling women. He will enthuse over the easy grace and exquisite colouring of some whom he knows to have been boxed up in cities for long months with never a breath of country air or a beauty sleep worth speaking of, and yet are as fresh as day, with clear skin and tinted cheeks that never owed thanks to any box of cosmetics, well-knit and muscular bodies, slender-curved and graceful.

This habit of almost nightly dancing is largely responsible for this new generation of fresh and lovely townswomen who, now so common, are such a contrast to their delicate, ailing sisters of a past decade ; and oddly enough, the habit has been mainly made possible by the passing of the old-fashioned and once-popular formal Ball. The simpler and more comfortable restaurant party, sanctioned by the war, has stayed to take its place, and by dining and dancing out at one of the many excellent places catering for that purpose, the burden of the old formal gathering—the expense and upheaval of preparation, the overheated atmosphere of rooms not scientifically designed for dancing—has been removed. On s'amuse maintenant inexpensively and well—and consequently, often—in an atmosphere cool, fresh and comfortable, with no worry of preparation or uncertainty of success. A perfectly-cooked dinner is the first act in an evening of perfect enjoyment, to which an excellent band and a perfect floor contribute their share.

London boasts many good rendez-vous for these dance-cum-dinner entertainments, but none better, cooler, more comfortable or inviting than the Palm Court of the Hotel Cecil. There, by an ingenious system of ventilation, the atmosphere is kept as fresh and healthy as the open country, and the artistic beauty of the restrained decorative scheme and soft luminous effects rests and satisfies eyes bored by too much dashing colour and superficial garishness. An air of good breeding and easy exclusiveness gives it the unmistakable cachet of the " gentle people "—to use an expressive phrase now out of date—and there are few places where a private party can feel more thoroughly at home and unencroached upon by the surrounding public.

Whatever one's recreation in the country, in town one has to dance in obedience to this wholesome race-preserving instinct which holds us in its inexorable grip. Cut off from other forms of exercise, it is our present health and hope of future salvation, and in our love of it lies the proof of our nation's determined struggling on the upward grade So, when we dance, still loving our traditions and the outward trappings of our inward breeding, let's dance at the Cecil.

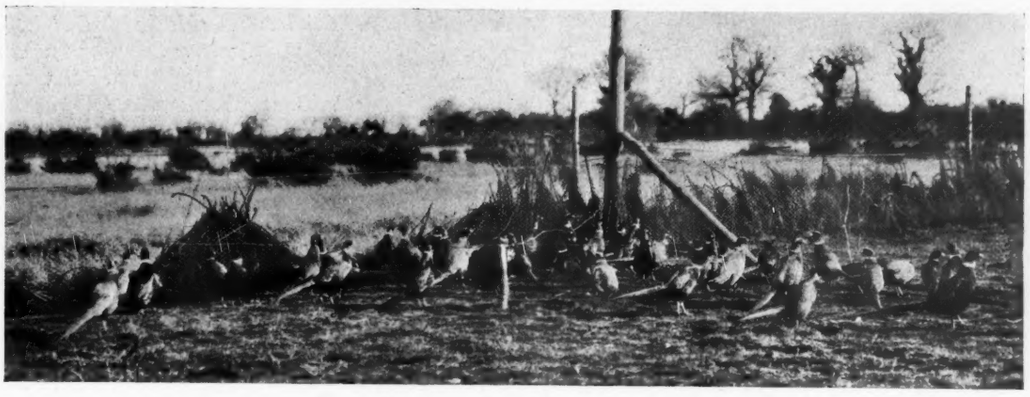
SHOOTING NOTES

By Max Baker.



A CORNER OF THE COCK PHEASANT PEN.

THE WIVENHOE GAME FARM.

I RECENTLY paid a visit, which proved to be full of interest, to the East Essex Game Farm. It is situated about a mile from Wivenhoe Station, and is, therefore, only a short run out of Colchester. A new proprietor, in the person of Mr. G. D. Norfolk, who carries on business in the district, is busy remodelling the place and preparing the farmhouse for the occupation of his future son-in-law, who will be manager. The farm covers an area of 413 acres, and, although the pens only occupy a proportion of this space, the rest will be turned to good account growing corn for the use of the birds, besides affording the necessary provision for changing ground. The keeper in charge is F. Wilson, whom, curiously enough, I very quickly identified as son of a keeper who once acted for me when I rented a shoot not very far away. A strong young fellow who was preparing the laying pens proved to be the third generation, so showing the hereditary tendency in this most attractive of callings. The quality of the land I already knew fairly well. This particular sample, like many others in the district, is a light but fairly rich loam, lending itself to high cultivation, with a subsoil which very soon merges into a bright white sand plentifully interspersed with shingle. The fields were of typical partridge character, of nice size, having clean fences and remarkably dry, considering the heavy rainfall of the previous period. The hen pheasants were penned on the sunny slope of a brook valley furnished with nice shelter running right down to the water. The cocks were similarly enclosed in a flat plateau field, sprinkled all over with gorse and broom and hence affording an unusual amount of shelter. As might be expected in such a district, wild ducks are a speciality, the stream already referred to having been dammed in steps for their accommodation, plentiful springs keeping the water in ever-fresh condition throughout the year. Traps, on the system which has been described in these notes, are used for catching up the wild visitors and so purging the strain from the tame blood which under present conditions is a disadvantage. Funnily enough, no wild ducks have come inland this winter, though hundreds are to be seen further down the Colne estuary. Altogether I came to the conclusion that, under the new and vigorous management now finding its feet, this nicely situated and amply stocked game farm will become an important source not only of egg supply but of birds for turning down.

REMINISCENCES.

Very naturally, with so many associations in common, I took advantage of the opportunity to enjoy a discursive chat with the keeper in charge. His father used to send me as many as two and three reports in a week, and varied were the tasks which we shared, on my side largely for the purpose of availing myself of his readiness to impart information from the large stores he possessed. Like many of the best old keepers, he had always devoted a special care and study to partridges, and I certainly never knew a man more popular with the farmers, this largely on account of the thoroughness with which he cleared peculiarly susceptible land from the presence of rats. With the son I soon discovered a special bond of interest, for he was the keeper that kept the pheasants that ate the turnips that roused the wrath of David Lloyd George. Apparently, the pheasants did eat the mangolds. It happened in this wise: A small wood containing 400 or more rabbits lay in the vicinity of the turnip field, and in the night they would foregather in the roots to nibble at the rind and so uncover the agreeable fare beneath. By day nothing would be seen of the true marauders, though here and there pheasants would be seen wandering around taking dainty pecks at the farinaceous-looking surfaces that were exposed. This explanation is fairly well known at the present time, and all are agreed that the pheasant never takes the first bite. No matter whether sheep or rabbits start the damage, frost soon gets in and spoils the root. The law has already taken cognisance of the injury that can be caused by rabbits, hence the speech would never have assumed the form it did had the identity of the culprits been known at the time.

THE UNTAMEABLE PHEASANT.

Anybody who is brought into contact with pheasants soon realises the truth of Tegetmeier's dictum, that it is an inherently wild bird with unyielding resistance to any process of domestication. Twice lately, on visiting farms where they are accorded the nearest possible approach to control, I have been impressed by their dislike for the proximity of strangers. A man whose association with the work covers thirty years told me that when his terms of engagement had been settled his future employer addressed him as follows: "There is one more thing I want to have clear from the start, nobody who looks after my birds is allowed to wear best clothes on a Sunday, no fancy geegaws are allowed to disturb them and put them off their feed." That Sunday rule is still religiously kept. A stranger passing unconcernedly along the row of pens finds his attention suddenly roused, the contents of each in turn making wild dashes against the top wire-netting. So obvious is their panic that the visitor hurries past only to put another pen of birds into a similar state of fright. And yet, catch up a pheasant, hold it in the hand, and its absolute quiescence would shame the average baby.

AN EARLY BREECH-LOADER.

Mr. Russell of Stephen Grant's recently sent me a note to say that an interesting rifle had just come into their place and that it merited a visit of inspection. It proved to be a fine example of one of the early attempts at a breech-loader. As will be seen from the illustration, the breech end is set on a pivot and so can be tilted up to allow insertion of the powder, wads and bullet. The barrel has sufficient longitudinal play to permit the breech end being turned down so as to be in line, barrel and breech end being locked by turning the lever seen at the back. The maker's name is Biven, and he carried on business at 16, Regent Street. Since the action has been converted from flint to percussion it is older than a first glance would suggest. The ball it fires is of 22 calibre (.596in.), and that many of them have been fired is sufficiently proved by erosion around the nipple. Wonderfully sighted, including an aperture on the grip, it was no doubt a deadly weapon in its day. That gun invention was so prolific during the period of evolution may be ascribed to the fact that the old-time gunsmiths not only knew every branch of their art, but could fashion the most complicated structures with rudimentary appliances.

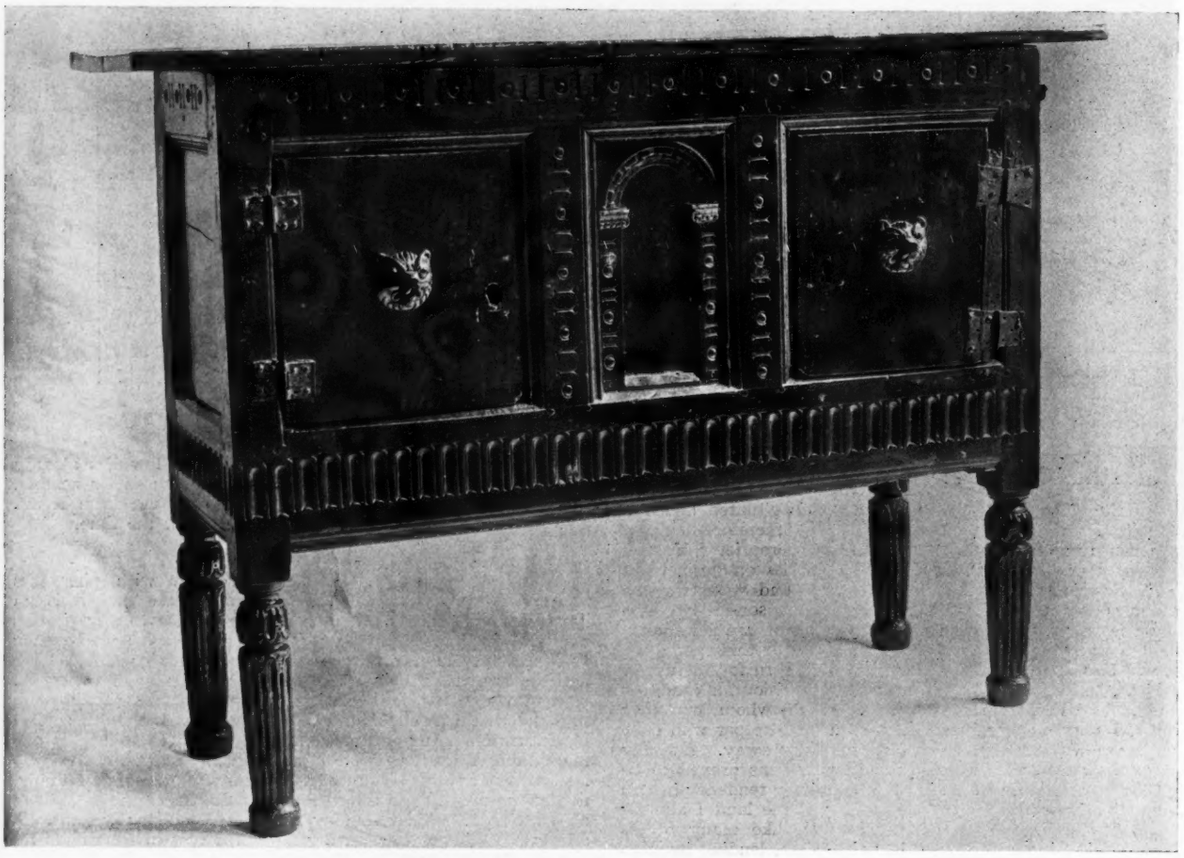
MR. THURSBY-PELHAM'S COLLECTION OF ENGLISH FURNITURE.—I



1.—SIDEBOARD FROM COUND HALL.
Period of James I.

THIS collection, ranging in date from the time of Elizabeth to the end of the eighteenth century, illustrates in a marked degree the development of English furniture during its best periods, and is distinguished, moreover, on account of the fine quality of design and workmanship displayed in the execution of individual specimens. Photographs, unfortunately, give but a poor idea of the richness of carving and surface found in many of the originals. The foundation of the collection may be said to be due in the first instance to the inheritance by Mr. Thursby-Pelham of an estate in Shropshire, on which stood Cound Hall, a well known house of the early eighteenth century, described and illustrated in COUNTRY LIFE, Vol. XLIII, 1918. Mr. Pelham subsequently disposed of the estate, but brought to London the most valuable pieces of furniture, which Cound Hall contained, and by adding to them from time to time has built up the important collection described in this and succeeding numbers of COUNTRY LIFE.

It should be stated that the estate on which Cound Hall stood belonged in the sixteenth century to Sir Henry Townshend, whose daughter, in the reign of James I, married one Edward Cressett, the owner, among other properties, of the neighbouring Upton Cressett, a remote country house deeply buried in the heart of the county of Shropshire and architecturally famed for a brick gate-house of the Early Tudor period. By this marriage Cound passed to the Cressett family. Richard Cressett, a descendant of the Edward Cressett referred to above, decided to rebuild the house and completed the work in 1704, employing an architect named Prince, reputed to be a local man. At a later date the estate passed by inheritance to Henry Pelham of Crowhurst, Comptroller of the Customs, and from him to the owner of the collection which we are now considering.

Although Cound Hall was built about 1704, much of the furniture which it contained was of oak construction and earlier in date than the house. It is evident that Richard Cressett partly furnished his new home with some of the family furniture from the older Cound Hall as well as with pieces which probably belonged in the first instance to Upton Cressett. This article will be concerned with the furniture mainly of oak construction, belonging in character, though not necessarily in date, to the style commonly known as Jacobean.

It must be borne in mind that in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries Shropshire was a remote district and but faintly influenced by the changes of fashion which from time to time affected the metropolis. The West of England was essentially agricultural and typically English. London and the Eastern Counties had been from the time of the early Tudors under the spell of influences from abroad which are reflected in the architecture and decoration, and to a lesser degree in the furniture, of these districts. At the time of Henry VIII the invitation extended by Cardinal Wolsey to Italian artists, the Flemish influence in the City and the Eastern Counties during the Elizabethan period, the classical revival by Inigo Jones at the time of Charles I, the affectation of foreign manners, first by the Court of Charles II and later by the habit of Continental travel, the introduction of French craftsmen due to the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes, these and other causes left their mark on the building, decoration and furniture of London and the neighbouring counties. The great families of England carried the new fashions to their country houses throughout the land. But, with the middle classes in the country—the farmer, the tradesman and others—traditions were handed down from father to son, and types of furniture continued often to be made long after London and the neighbouring counties had abandoned them. Thus, in such a county as Shropshire we find that oak furniture reminiscent of the period of Elizabeth and James I was made at the time of Charles II and even later, when at headquarters new styles had succeeded the old.

In dating much of this furniture made in country districts we are, therefore, face to face with difficulties. Perhaps, bearing all things in mind, it is best not to attempt to date them too closely. Their merits are obvious in themselves. Much time can be spent in splitting hairs over the question of dates, while disregarding the greater importance and romantic interest of the furniture as silent witnesses to the habits, manners and customs of England of the past. It must also be remembered that a piece of furniture made at a certain period may have been altered or adapted at a later date, producing a composite type which is liable to mislead the so-called expert of the present day.

Mr. Pelham's collection contains many examples which are in some respects unusual. The cupboard (Fig. 2), which might reasonably be assigned to the time of James I, is interesting as showing the passing of the chest into the sideboard, fluted legs raising the height, and the front panels with mask handles being hinged to form doors; the type, though differently constructed, goes back to Early Tudor times. The cupboard chest of drawers (Fig. 6), again, calls for notice, since in general construction it resembles a Court cupboard of the time of James I, but the lower part is fitted with drawers instead of the cupboard with doors which was the form commonly found. Fitting a chest with drawers, to form the type now known as "chest of drawers," does not appear to have been the fashion in England before the reign of Charles II. In the dresser (Fig. 8) with shaped mouldings of the time of Charles II more usefulness is obtained by means both of drawers and cupboards, while its greater size would make it suitable for the sideboard of a dining-room. The public-house slate (Fig. 4) with three hinged doors is a rare object of domestic use promoted to-day to the dignity of a work of art, a point of view probably not shared by the rustics of the past whose names and debts adorned its surfaces.

Among other pieces illustrated are many well known types of furniture found at the period of Elizabeth and during the first half of the seventeenth century. The cradle (Fig. 5) is distinguished for fine quality of carving and richness of surface; the frieze of grotesque dolphins is a familiar feature at Upton Cressett, so that it is probable that the cradle was brought originally from this house. The Court cupboard (Fig. 3) differs only from typical cupboards of the seventeenth century in the fact that a medallion head, a feature suggestive of Early Tudor work, adorns the central door.

In all the furniture of this type, essentially English in character, we cannot fail to be impressed by its honesty of purpose and soundness of workmanship. Men worked on tradition. They made the types of furniture which were necessary for the habits of their lives. They carved and inlaid them because human nature, from the time of primitive man, has found pleasure in decoration. They probably had no fantastic theories about style or artistic qualities. Nor were they influenced by alien and often unsuitable fashions. It was not till a century later that Englishmen so far departed from their traditional saneness as to produce work like the so-called Chinese Chippendale.

THE SAMPLERS OF LONG AGO

DRAWINGS AND BOOKS

As a mere record of patterns or stitches the sampler or exemplar must have existed ever since embroidery was planned. In the sixteenth century, when the dress of both sexes was adorned with rich needlework, the sampler became a favourite theme of the poets, as witness Skelton (1460–1525) in the "Lament for Philip Sparrow":

> "I took my sampler once,
> Of purpose for the nonce,
> To sew with stitches of silk
> My sparrow white as milk," while other references may be found in the works of Shakespeare, Sir Philip Sidney and Milton. The older ones are long and narrow, while in general those of eighteenth century are more proportionate in height and width. In the nineteenth century they become nearly square and the border, which appeared in the eighteenth century, is more pronounced.

The oldest samplers are the richest and most artistic, intricate ornament minutely stitched in harmonious hues melting into a time-mellowed canvas. In that illustrated the alphabet at top is alternately in green and salmon pink; the second band of tulips and pinks is of the same colours with blue; in the geometrical pattern below it there are beautiful colour modifications. The whole effect is of sunlight and jewel colour. In the finer ornament in outline there is a reminiscence of the "black work" of Katherine of Aragon; while the roses, acorns and pansies have patches executed in lacestitch with brilliant effect. These are clearly shown in the panel-like ornaments in the band above the middle of the sampler, which occur in samplers of the same date, and are described as the Stuart rose and acorn. Nearer the bottom, not shown here, is a band of boys, alternating with ornaments and ribbon in fleur-de-lis arrangement, which is found in some Stuart samplers. The boys are supposed to represent Oliver Cromwell as a tailed devil, but are known also as "boxers." The peculiar G of the alphabet with the reversed p serving for q is evidence of the early date of this sampler. Another is similar in arrangement, but the detail is different, the alphabet coming near the middle, where there are the initials D. S. in addition. Lower, there is a broad band of white work. Near the foot, within an enclosure, is a very quaint pictorial composition of Abraham's sacrifice—with a stag, birds, insects and flowers without. This example is reproduced by courtesy of Messrs. Debenham and Freebody, who have many early and later specimens.

By the inscriptions we see that many of these were worked by the fingers of long-forgotten children. Some show most proper and melancholy precepts. The fear of death and the cultivation of virtue were sedulously instilled into the young mind. "Zealously persevere in the getting of knowledge, virtue and piety" was inculcated at the needle's point. These things may be out of keeping with our modern educational systems, but they have a charm of their own; they have preserved the ideals and sentiments of the bygone generations.

Some important drawings by old masters from the collection of the late Frederick Locker Lampson will come up at Messrs. Christie's on March 9th after the sale of the Asher Wertheimer pictures. The first, by Correggio, is a study in red chalk for the fresco of the Assumption of the Virgin in the Cupola of the Duomo at Parma, and was formerly in the Royal collection of King Charles I. By Claude le Lorrain is the Romantic Landscape, seen through tall trees, of a distant castle and hills; in the foreground a stream with figures and cattle. It has been engraved by R. Earlom, and is executed in sepia on green paper. By Titian is the sketch of one of the frescoes in the Scuolo di Sant' Antonio at Padua, the subject being the miracles performed by Saint Anthony and representing the saint convincing a jealous husband of the innocence of his wife. Pictures from different properties follow, including a portrait of David Garrick in brown coat and vest, with clasped hands, by Sir Joshua Reynolds; and another of Dr. John Armstrong, a friend of Reynolds, in brown suit and vest with brass buttons, white stock and full-bottomed wig, painted in 1755-56. A well known picture by Eglon van der Neer portrays a lady representing the Virgin holding a crystal revealing scenes from the Holy Life with an angel with uplifted hands standing by. It is signed and dated 1693.

Books and a few manuscripts, including a selection from the remainder of the library at Syston Park, Grantham, the property of Sir J. C. Thorold, Bt. (the first portion), the properties of Mr. H. C. Marillier, Mr. Sydney Sidney-Humphries of Bohun Court, Worcestershire, and others will be offered by Messrs. Sotheby on March 6th and two ensuing days. The whole forms a library of general literature of the seventeenth, eighteenth and nineteenth centuries, a considerable number of works being in first edition, some with beautiful illustrations. There are volumes on the fine arts, old sporting books with coloured illustrations, useful works of reference, and some rare books, including "The Nyne fyrst bookes of the Eneidos of Virgil converted into Englishe vearse," by Thomas Phaer, 1562; "Gulliver's Travels" in its first edition, large paper, 1726; Hakluyt's "Voyages," 1598–1600; La Fontaine's "Fables," first issue before inscription on plate, page 110, Vol. III 1755–59; Livius's Decades, Milan, 1480; and the "Miroir de la redemption humaine," Lyons, 1482. On March 5th and 6th they will sell old engravings with some Baxter prints; on the 7th, pictures by old masters; on the 8th and 9th, English and Irish glass, Italian majolica, furniture, textiles and fans, including a very fine specimen of the latter, formerly in the possession of Marie Antoinette, and painted with a palace garden scene of Louis XVI and Marie Antoinette renewing their vows at an altar, on the occasion of the birth of the Dauphin, with the Princess Elizabeth and the King's brothers in attendance.

A FINE AND VERY OLD EXAMPLE OF THE SAMPLER.

Among the pictures to be sold by Messrs. Robinson, Fisher and Harding on March 8th are the very important "View of the old Horse Guards Parade, from St. James' Park," ascribed to T. Wyck; portrait of Lady Gibsone in a white dress, by Sir Henry Raeburn; and a full-length portrait of Lady Anne Campbell, afterwards Countess of Strafford, in peeress's robes, by Allan Ramsay. On February 22nd they obtained for a pair of panels—"The Queen of Trumps" and "Touchstone," by J. F. Herring, sen.—£73 10s. (Fores.).

MONEY

MESSRS. HARDENS submit their fortnightly report as follows:

Markets are better, and prices moving upwards, but it would be wise for the investor to tread warily for the next three months, unless the political clouds become less ominous than at present.

The French have taken the bit between their teeth over the Ruhr question, and shown their indifference to everyone's interests over the Turkish question. In consequence, Exchanges are demoralised, and we have to continually buy stock from the Continent.

If the necessity for funds is so urgent at Angora, the moderate party may be able to bring about a settlement. In that case, Turkish Unified Bonds, higher than a fortnight ago, will move rapidly, as the buying has been good.

Peru Preference and Ordinary are worth buying at present.

The quiet movement in Gordon Hotels is worth noting.

A working arrangement of some kind between Levers and African and Eastern, can be regarded as a certainty, so that when the great African experience of the latter Company affects the Niger Company, the latter Company's 8 per cent. Cumulative Preference will prove cheap at 18/9.

TEA SHARES.

The commodity market has not been quite so strong of late, but tea shares should not be valued on common tea over 1/3 per lb. The tea share market, however, is very strong. Whilst production costs are lower and the selling price high, the producing companies are attaining very sound financial positions. Tea shares have still a long way to go to reach their record prices when the outlook, as regards consumption, was not so good as to-day.

An interesting feature is the introduction of Indian rupee companies to the London market as sterling companies. If Rangallas are not opened at a big premium they should form an excellent purchase. Kintyres can be bought to hold for £2. Sephinjuri Bheel 8 per cent. Convertible Debentures when obtainable are an excellent purchase. Amongst companies with no prior charges and in a sound position YATADERIAS are about the only shares around par, and can be safely purchased.

For those who want good dividends and consequent capital appreciation SOUTHERN INDIAS can be recommended about 43/-. Dividends have been paid by this Company up to 30 per cent. and an interim has been paid for the financial year ending February 28th of 7½ per cent. Costs are estimated at 7d. per lb. and the output at 950,000lb. On a capital of £7,300 in 6 per cent. Preference and £52,700 Ordinary a profit of upwards of £20,000 makes a very bright outlook for the shareholders.

RUBBER.

The Share Market is comparatively quiet, but for those who can be patient there are opportunities now for certain appreciation and dividends. If Permas can attain the 1916-1917 position this year, they have decided possibilities on the recent set-back to 17/-. There are unsatisfied cheap buyers looking for Kuala Hidongs. British New Guinea Development 10/- shares, 9/- paid, are quite a good long shot.

OIL.

The market is widening in interest steadily. The rumour about Eagles and V.O.C. is interesting as regards Venezuela. The best American Oil Journal just received has a long article on the question—whether Venezuela is going to supplant Mexico as a source of supplies.

These points are indicators for the possibilities of OMNIUM OIL Shares, with its big Venezuelan holdings. Whilst the Company has valuable interests in Colombia and in a Spanish-Moroccan Company, its chief possibilities lie in Venezuela. When the Company's position is solidified by operating subsidiaries, and the public realise its possibilities, the shares are not likely to be obtainable at anything like the present price.

The announcement last Saturday by Oilfields of Egypt makes the £1 shares at 2/9 look like a very promising speculation. Trinidad Leaseholds should prove a good purchase about 32/-.

MINING.

Mexican Corporation 10 per cent. Convertible 7 year notes redeemable at 120 are covered on present earnings three times over and on the developments a purchase is justified.

If Tin continues to hold its price BANGRIN Dredging in spite of the rise may not be over-valued.

Cordoba Copper shareholders have a long wait ahead for returning, but probably it will be well worth while.

Amongst the Kaffirs the Geduld position is steadily improving; for those who are not needing dividends WEST SPRINGS are an excellent purchase; as a gamble Coronation Syndicates have attractions not to be overlooked.

If the rumour be correct some of the big holders bought Burma Corporations much higher than 9/—hence it is probable the latest developments will help a much better price to be obtainable by June, particularly, if the Parsee element started to gamble in the shares (10 rupee) as a result of better conditions in India.

On Thursday returns were first published by the UBIQUE TRUST from its Rhodesian properties and it appears as though a new Rhodesian producer is in the offing that has something substantial to start off with. The story goes that it is a case of a reef that was overlooked and which now has big possibilities.

CHURCH PLATE AT THE VICTORIA AND ALBERT MUSEUM

MUCH interest was taken in the recent articles in COUNTRY LIFE on the influence of Archbishop Laud on English church plate, and on the old plate at the Church Congress. An illustrated catalogue* of the large collection of silver and metal chalices, some seventy in number, in the Victoria and Albert Museum, has now been published.

The first in date is a French silver-gilt chalice of the early thirteenth century, with a bowl of the fourteenth century, the chief feature in the decoration of the circular foot being four medallions representing scenes from the life of Christ. Of the following century is an interesting silver chalice from Grundt Church in Iceland, which is attributed to an unknown Icelandic goldsmith, presumably on the ground that it was found there. In outline it follows the type of chalice prevailing in western Christendom at this date. There are several Italian chalices in the collection, fitted with silver-gilt bowls elaborately mounted in copper-gilt, which would hardly accord well with English Gothic churches, but would be in keeping with the more highly decorated churches of Italy. Interesting as these Italian chalices are in the technical details, in the enamel and in other decorative features, it is almost with a sense of relief that the spectator turns from these ornate vessels to the severe and dignified form of the four Flemish chalices of the fifteenth century in the museum. A Flemish example of the early part of the following century is rare on account of the charm-word, ANANISABTA, engraved upon it, as was not uncommon upon rings as a charm against epilepsy.

Spanish chalices of the second half of the fifteenth century are distinguished for their elaborate Late Gothic decoration. Two specimens are shown here and were probably wrought at Avila. The arms upon one indicate that it was probably the gift of Pedro Davila, Lord of Villafranca and las Navas, while the arms upon the other are those of Gonzalo Davila, of Avila, and his second wife, Maria de Saavedra. A third Spanish chalice came from the workshop of a Cordova goldsmith early in the sixteenth century, and a fourth, dated 1549, is an interesting example of the Spanish taste in Renaissance decoration.

English pre-Reformation silver chalices are represented by only two specimens. The first is of the type prevailing towards the end of the fifteenth century and has a plain conical bowl, supported on a stem of hexagonal shape divided by a large knop and resting on a splayed base of hexagonal outline with incurved sides. The companion paten has a six-lobed depression, engraved with the head of Christ. The second chalice is of the final form made in England before the Reformation. Here the bowl remains conical and plain; the hexagonal stem and large knop are retained, but the curved hexagonal foot gives way to one of six-lobed outline. The paten has a depression of six lobes, bolder and larger than those in the earlier paten mentioned above. This chalice and its paten came from Eyrarbakki in Iceland and are practical illustrations of the presence of English arts and crafts in Scandinavia in mediæval times. Their precise date of 1527–28 is determined by the London hall-mark stamped upon them. A reproduction of the important English chalice and paten of the thirteenth century, found buried in the earth near Dolgelly in North Wales, is also included.

The illustrations will, no doubt, be of value and interest not only to the ecclesiologist and the student of the changes of fashion in the chalices and patens of western Christendom, but also to the craftsman, though the reproduction of the over-elaborated specimens could not be recommended as suitable for English churches.

The introduction to the catalogue traces the history of the chalice both in England and on the Continent and cites many notable examples surviving to-day. Sufficient use has not, perhaps, been made of the ecclesiastical vessels in illuminated manuscripts, particularly French and English. For example, according to this introduction, no English silver chalice of earlier date than the thirteenth century is extant. But, by a strange neglect, the writer has forgotten to state that chalices are shown in the English drawings in the "Life of St. Guthlac of Croyland," of the late twelfth century, in the British Museum. Another criticism which might justly be made is the omission of an account of the flagon introduced into the Church of England after the Reformation, from the section devoted to Post-Reformation cups and other communion vessels. On page 29 the chalices of about 1690 at the Chapel Royal, St. James's Palace, should be described as gold. Two additions might have been made to the valuable bibliography, namely, Mr. H. C. Moffat's "Old Oxford Plate," and Mr. E. Alfred Jones's "Old Plate of the Cambridge Colleges," which contain illustrations of the vessels in the various college chapels, many of them of great importance. These are blemishes which will, doubtless, be corrected in the second edition of this excellent catalogue.

*Catalogue of Chalices and other Communion Vessels. (Victoria and Albert Museum, 3s. 4d.)

The Lion and the Rose, by Ethel M. Richardson. Two vols. (Hutchinson, 32s.)

EVEN if the story of the Howard family is also the story of England, which is approximately true for a limited period, Mrs. Richardson is too much given to rewriting chapters of English history. The connection between Hereward, the last of the Saxons who held out in the Ely marshes against the Norman, and the Howard pedigree is family myth-making, and we are not upon firm ground until we reach Sir William Howard, Justice of the Common Pleas under the first and second Edwards. The awkward interspace between the Justice and the Wake is, however, lightly filled with sentences such as: "but the years rolled on, and kings came and went the way of all flesh, while the line of Howard continued from father to son." But, in spite of its shortcomings, The Lion and the Rose is a very readable record of a remarkable family. Mrs. Richardson is fortunate in her researches in the byways of social history. She prints some letters preserved at Charlton, so frail in parts, she tells us, and with edges so frayed, that one is almost afraid to turn the pages. Lady Dorothy Child's letters are a miniature of the middle years of the eighteenth century, with its preoccupation with cards, and the famous Maclean, who at last is "tucked up," the opera and the play. When she sees "Romeo and Juliet" she is much affected—by the stage funeral. "They say" (she tells us) "Rich has already got a thousand pounds by introducing a funeral procession in the play where Juliet is supposed to be dead. Its an exact representation of the Burials abroad, but, my brother says, rather finer. It lasts half an hour, and I do believe there's near a hundred attends; the bier she's upon is the noblest and most shocking sight that can be seen." The latest finery she buys seems to-day as fresh as her pleasure in it: "I have bought a pink and silver" (she writes in the last letter of the packet), "it's pretty, and quite a new taste, but as I have a new head, and my Livery's and chair new, I think it a proper day to show them." She writes artlessly, like a Georgian lady of quality, recognising that she must, in the compass of a short letter, have "made the thousand blunders, but hopes dear Sir Robert will not mind these." Her readers will not. The last chapter brings the story of the Earldom of Suffolk down to the present day.

THE AUTOMOBILE WORLD.

TO THE ITALIAN FRONTIER ON A WOLSELEY FOURTEEN

A NEW model introduced by any manufacturer is always something of a problem, because the feminine quality of every mechanically propelled vehicle means that what applies to one member of the family will not necessarily apply to another born of the same parents and reared in the same environment. Cars have character and individuality, and no family of this ever growing world has it to a more marked extent than that which has its chief establishment at Adderley Park, Birmingham. Therefore it came about that a recent trip across France in a new 14 h.p. Wolseley had in it something of the nature of a test run for the car as well as for myself in the ordinary way of car testing. And what a trial it was! Going down we crossed the Auvergnes and Cevennes mountains, mostly over deeply snow-covered roads; coming back, in a wild hope of escaping the snow, we took a more level route, and surely found the worst roads that can exist in any civilised country. Of all which more in due course.

Firstly, a few brief particulars about the car and its design. To those who know the six-cylinder Wolseley this 14 h.p. engine will strike a note of familiarity, for, except for its possession of four cylinders instead of six, its external appearance is much the same. The overall design is characteristic of the Wolseley breed in the unmistakable impression it gives of solidity and the ability to live long and happily under the stress of a strenuous life—an impression that applies to the chassis and to the car as a whole just as much as to the engine alone. The bore and stroke are 80mm. by 130mm.—the same as those of the very popular 15 h.p. model with overhead valves. The 14 h.p. engine has its valves arranged side by side, so that it is a power unit designed with maximum efficiency as an afterthought rather than a primary consideration—a principle of car construction that I have previously described as having very much in its favour and one that must not in any sense be regarded as suggesting out-of-dateness or anything else that is not desirable. Indeed, I cannot conceive of an overhead-valve engine that could show the same quite uncanny slogging propensities of this Wolseley model, and its hill-climbing capacity was little short of extraordinary. How good it really was may be judged from the bald statement that never once on the whole trip of some 2,500 miles did we have to drop to bottom gear for climbing a hill—and we found some hills.

Water circulation of the engine is by pump, which partially explains why long grinding climbs of several miles on second gear in a broiling sun only once succeeded in raising the water to anywhere near boiling point, and on that particular occasion there was also a fairly strong following wind. Ignition is by high-tension magneto, and carburation by an instrument fed by gravity from a tank housed in the scuttle. To dispose of one or two criticisms of the engine at once: my first and most serious is that, with the power unit, as with the rest of the chassis, the accessibility theme might have received a little more attention on the part of the designer. The presence of some dirt in the petrol tank soon after we had started away from Dieppe brought home vividly one shortcoming in this respect. The petrol tap is situated immediately above the oil filler, so that if the fuel union be detached and any petrol allowed to run from the tank, as it must be allowed on such occasions, much of it will find its way on to the combined oil filler and breather, which has a perforated lid, and so into the crank case. Conversely, when it is required to fill the engine with oil the petrol pipe gets in the way of the oil-containing vessel and necessitates the use of a curved funnel; and such a funnel is not always available when required. There are one or two other engine details to which similar criticism might be applied, but of them the only one likely to concern the average private owner is the position of the magneto contact-breaker, which, after all, is no more awkwardly placed than are the contact-breakers on the majority of cars.

My final engine criticism is that the carburettor with which it is equipped as standard hardly appears to be the best suited for such a unit and such a car. Much careful tuning by a Wolseley man and by their excellent agents at Weybridge failed to give a better consumption than 17 m.p.g., which, instead of improving, as anticipated, when we got French "Tourisme" into the tank, fell to about 15½ m.p.g. Then I wired to the Wolseley Company and asked if I might have another carburettor, which arrived in due course and reduced the consumption to about 20 m.p.g., which was still on the high side for a car of this size. But let it be said at once that the car was quite heavily loaded, that it is a heavy car, and harder going than we had on our outward and return journeys would be difficult to conceive.

The Austin Twelve

Combining Excellence and Economy

THE "Berkeley" illustrated is a model recently introduced in response to the demand for a landaulet of medium capacity. Two folding seats extend the interior accommodation to four passengers, while the eye is delighted by the harmony of the Bedford Cord or enamelled hide with the chosen colour of the body. Characteristic Austin thoroughness in test and selection of material, a reputation which Austin workmen have made their own, and the strictest inspection at every stage ensure long and untroubled service from the compact chassis with its sturdy engine. "Untroubled service" means low running costs. The price of the "Berkeley" is £600 at Works. There are Touring and Coupé "Austin Twelve" models at prices ranging from £450 to £600.

For the rest of the chassis, the clutch is a leather cone, the gear-box gives three speeds and reverse, all brakes operate on the rear wheels, and the springs are quarter elliptics—described by the makers as cantilevers—in both front and rear. The tyre size is 815mm. by 105mm. Comments on this portion of the car are called for only by the gear-box, for the rest is of a standard that does credit even to makers like Wolseleys. The gear-box is lubricated by oil, which seemed to last for a rather short time, so that I soon decided to fill it up with grease, and acted on the decision with satisfactory results.

THE STATUE OF THE VIRGIN, LE PUY.

CROSSING THE CHANNEL.

But to get on with the travelling part of the story—the trip proper. First of all, the start and the method. It is not difficult to get a car across to France provided one knows all the ropes, but there are so many ropes to be known that the achievement is practically impossible to the private individual. What I did was to tell that excellent institution, that I am afraid that sometimes my impatience got the better of my judgment, with the result that the second speed became very noisy indeed as the mileage mounted up.

But the refilling process is rendered somewhat difficult by the design of the lid, which has to be removed completely, and the process is impeded by various little excrescences that get in the way of the operator's knuckles. Also, the wait necessary when changing up from first to second was so long and so reluctant to respond to double declutching treatment the A.A., that I wanted to cross on a certain date, and everything seemed to be done by magic. Five minutes at Fanum House, Whitcomb Street, when both car and myself were hall-marked as fit and competent for the journey, a very pleasant chat with the A.A. man at Newhaven, and the car was stowed away cosily on board and I found myself looking forward to doing a few necessary jobs to it during the crossing. But alas! there is a limit even to the powers of the A.A., and Stenson Cooke cannot command the waters of the Channel! At Dieppe everything could have been just as simple, for the A.A. man there, like A.A. men everywhere else, knew his job from A to Z; but, sea-sickness and French officialdom do not go any too well together, and there was much to be done.

As I have already said, our way down lay across the mountains of Central France, where we found the roads, on the whole, thoroughly satisfactory. But in order to get in a timely warning to anyone who may be contemplating the journey to the Sunny South in the near future, let me say with all the emphasis I can command, do not follow our return route. Provided there have been no fresh heavy falls of snow the mountain route is perfectly practicable and is well worth the extra hundred miles or so it puts on to the total distance.

Rouen was our first stage—and who could leave Rouen early in the morning? We spent half the following day looking over the wonderful monuments of a picturesque if none too pleasant past possessed by this "Ville Musée," as they call it. How different it all seemed from when I first saw it in the cold light of dawn seven years ago. Things were indeed different then, and my business was not pleasure but war, and my means of transport not a luxurious motor car, but a thing called out of courtesy a railway carriage. And then on to Chartres, another town that refuses to be passed through without a few hours' pause. Here the chief object of interest is the wonderful stained glass of the cathedral, although I believe that of Bourges is reckoned quite as good, and to my untrained eye it seemed better, although there was perhaps not quite so much of it. It was in Chartres Cathedral that we met an old Frenchman who appears to have devoted the greater part of his life to photographing all its details, and some very fine pictures he had, although the volumes in which they were bound were of but mediocre quality as regards the reproductions of the photographs.

As far as Chartres everything had been plain sailing except for two stoppages due to dirt in the petrol tank; but very soon after leaving Chartres we had a foretaste of what we were in for as regards roads. As far as Artenay—fifty-one kilometres—on the way to Orleans (another twenty) the road was deeply potholed and was in course of "repair." I thought I had seen the limit in road-repairing crudities in the Chertsey area of Surrey, but realised my mistake very early on this stretch from Chartres. The potholes were big and deep, they were filled up with loose stones and covered over with loose earth dug from the field at the roadside. The earth was simply thrown down and left in heaps, soon cut into ruts by passing traffic, in some cases nearly six inches high. Some of the potholes had been left untouched, so that driving consisted at first in futile efforts, which were soon abandoned, at dodging both hollows and bumps. From Artenay to Orleans we found the finest stretch of road during the whole trip until we had passed Cannes and Antibes on the road to Nice.

Briefly, after Orleans our route lay through Bourges, the town with the cathedral claimed by the natives to be the first in France now that Rheims is no more, thence we began the climb over the lower slopes of the Auvergnes, which brought us through Montlucon to Clermont-Ferrand—two towns notable as centres of manufacture of two famous tyres. After Clermont begins the real climb over the Auvergnes, with scenery modest compared with that of the Cevennes, but nevertheless well worth visiting. And then, through wonderful Vielle Brioude into the snow, we gradually made our way to le Puy, a town that always strikes me as one of the most fascinating anyone could wish to see. Over the hills among which it lies we cruised easily in spite of the snow, for the Wolseley pulled its hardest and its wheels never called for the Parson's chains that we had in the car.

It was after leaving le Puy and its remarkable monuments perilously perched on the top of vertical mountains of rock, that we found what was surely the lowest temperature allowed by a civilised government to exist more than 20yds. away from either Arctic circle. The wind blew a hurricane that was no respecter of innumerable overcoats and the road was utterly devoid of shelter. In the middle of the mountainous waste we found isolated villages that had apparently both forgotten and been forgotten by the rest of the world and at Pradelles we turned off to the left for the long and picturesque descent to Aubenas. Always the surface was good, always the turnings were tricky and never did the scenery pall, but above all things was the terrific cold. Sometimes ice and snow lay across the road, but the wind and the temperature seemed to be almost too much for them, for in the most exposed places the road was bare—both ice and snow favouring the more sheltered spots.

At Aubenas, with its fine old castle, the mountains have been left behind and at Montelimar the Rhone Valley road is joined and followed to Avignon. This road formed part of our return route and to avoid it it would have paid us handsomely to have proceeded due south from Pradelles, through Villefort and Alais to Avignon. That road was quite good two years ago and it could not be so bad as the Rhone Valley road—the mountain roads of France always seem much better than those of the valleys or in the level country. It was on one short—very short—good, but only moderately good, stretch between Montelimar and Avignon that we struck a mass of unrolled stones, nearly 8ins. high and all across the road, at perhaps 40 m.p.h. The stretch was several hundred yards in length, but the Wolseley and the tyres stuck it out. On the whole the Dunlops treated us fairly; although, twice, two of them punctured simultaneously and these, in addition to the other seven punctures we had, were all due to the tiniest of flints and nails.

A detailed description of the return route is unnecessary, for in striking contrast to the Auvergnes-Cevennes way it is but modestly and quietly picturesque and possesses but little other interest. On occasion the road runs alongside the Rhone and afterwards the Loire, but neither river made much of an appeal to our senses other than by its size and the swiftness of its current—this latter most remarkable, of course, in the case of the Rhone. The following are the towns passed through between Monte Carlo and Orleans, and I have marked with an asterisk those that formed nights' resting places—sufficient evidence of the quality of the roads when I say that we pushed on the whole time as hard as we dared and that most nights we were travelling until close on and sometimes till after midnight: Monte Carlo, Frejus, Brignoles, Aix-en-Provence* (day's mileage, 141), Avignon, Montelimar, Valence* (131); St. Etienne, Roanne* (112); Moulins, Vichy, Nevers* (118), Gien, Orleans, Chartres* (148), and the distance from Chartres to Dieppe via Rouen is 123 miles.

From Cannes to near Gien the road is the Route Nationale No. 7, and a fatal number it is. It is difficult to say which is the worst section, but it was at Valence that we found a big crack developing across the windscreen frame and it was when leaving Valence in the morning that we found the top leaf of one of the front springs was broken. We had the spring replaced by one of our two spares at Roanne for the very modest sum of 35 francs—in England we should have been charged at least 35s., and should have had to wait the good graces of the garage people before the job was touched. Here the work was done in time for our early start the following morning, although we did not arrive until 9 p.m. the previous night. And at Orleans for 50 francs we had even better treatment, for here a back spring was replaced between the hours of 4.45 p.m. and 7.45 p.m.

On this question of spring breakages it must be remembered that actually they occurred on our return journey, and so the car had had much buffeting before any part gave way under the strain. And, honestly, I do not think the slightest blame attaches to the car for these catastrophes. Many excellent cars I know would have collapsed almost entirely before the several hundred miles of "N 7" had been covered, for even the several stretches of 50 miles or even more that we covered without once exceeding 12 m.p.h. meant really terrific stresses on the chassis. Certainly quite early in the trip, and I think before we had crossed the Channel, I had formed the opinion that the springing of this Wolseley model was somewhat on the soft side, but for English roads it is perhaps a good fault; for the French roads of to-day, springs that would be truly suitable would render a car almost unrideable.

As a word of advice to all British motorists taking their cars over to France I cannot say anything more useful nor with more emphasis than, Be sure to have a spare front and a spare rear spring, and more than one of each if accommodation can possibly be found for them. The springs of the car will be stressed as they would never be stressed in England, and irrespective of their make and calibre and of the care with which the car may be driven, the risk of breakage is really serious. And as it takes something over a fortnight for spares to arrive from England, even if air service be employed, the inconvenience of stowing away two or three extra springs on the car is well worth while. We also had with us a spare magneto, carburettor float, sparking plugs, of course, copper wire, seccotine and plasticene, all of which are advisable, but in our case proved to be unnecessary. But an invaluable detail in the equipment of the car was a Cooper-Stewart spotlight, which in the aggregate must have saved us many hours both by augmenting the power of the head lamps and by facilitating the reading of signposts at night.

There are many omissions from this much curtailed account of a memorable and severe car test, but if it catches the eye of only one poor motorist in time to prevent him from following the line and charging the pot-holes of N 7, it will not have been written in vain. And perhaps at some future date the opportunity will arise of telling the full and much more pleasant story of the route we took going down. We were told, by the way, that the reason N 7 was so bad was that there had been five months' rain which had washed away all the repairs of the road—which is quite believable if the repairs were carried out on the same lines as those we saw just completed between Chartres and Orleans. When we recrossed this road after an interval of some five weeks, all trace of the "repairs" had been washed away. It ought to be said, however, that practically everywhere south of Orleans signs of impending and more scientific road repairing for the immediate future were to be seen, and steam rollers were met at quite frequent intervals. THE LONG ARM OF COINCIDENCE

EGYPTIAN INSPIRATION IN DRESS AND THE DISCOVERIES AT LUXOR.

WHEN you come to consider, it is passing strange, not to say rather uncanny, that the world-wide interest in the discovery of the Tutankhamen treasures at Luxor should synchronise with the prevailing craze for things Egyptian in the world of dress, though, apart from Lord Carnarvon's successful quest, one wonders whether the same startling impression would have been made with these swathed draperies, sashes, hats with chin veils, weird turban head-dresses, trouser tea-gowns and the like. But as it has turned out, Tutankhamen—rest his soul!—has much to answer for and, judging from the daily treasures unearthed, he and his people can give us many a valuable hint in the matter of gorgeous raiment and the employment of precious gems. Anyway, the Egyptian craze has us firmly in its grasp at the moment, and couturières are working it for all it is worth, and not only in silhouette, but in materials, colours and metal embroideries. The latter, it is to be observed, are of the tarnished description, as though they have actually come out of the excavations. There is in particular a warm copper hue that appeals as a refreshing change from silver and gold, and is quite distinctive.

Nevertheless, I have a word of protest to offer against the present indiscriminate adoption of the skin-tight swathed evening toilette. Whether it is the cut or the figure of the wearer that is responsible for the ugly dip in below the hips is of no moment, for the result is disastrous in every case. On the other hand, one sees these same skirts hanging in a perfectly straight line, as they should, from waist to hem, and with no tentativeness as to length. They are essentially jupes that must be long at the back, no matter what vagaries are wrought with the fronts.

There is a new fashion of bunching on the draperies at the hips (an adjustment that does not thicken the figure in the least, thanks to the exquisite softness of the fabrics in vogue, nor yet when the same idea is affected in front), beneath which the skirt is usually drawn up in a few rough folds. Quite half the models seen at the moment appear to be composed of a slim tight slip hung about with draperies or partially concealed by an apron tunic.

With the passing of the sumptuous fur wraps which have been so general for evening wear during the cold months, anyway by those fortunate enough to possess them, there will come on the scene cloaks of less weighty character, a contingency clearly foreseen and forestalled by the leading couturières, who never fail to include several of these evening confections in their new season's display.

It is to be noticed how, in many instances, the doublures are as sumptuous and sometimes even surpass the magnificence of the exterior, while the materials to hand are incredibly lovely and seductive. Under the auspices of innumerable variations the circular cloak continues to hold a prominent place. It is by far the most comfortable to wear, besides being easy to adjust and simple to pack. All the same, circular is more or less a facon de parler, as many have a shapeliness imparted to the back by extremely deep yoke pieces or the fullness caught under to form a pouf, while others show gaugings that shape the sides to the figure.

But all are in accord as to the importance of large enveloping collars. These, from the back view, practically extinguish the head, and one of the latest, after the semblance of a dahlia, is included in our original suggestion. To emphasise the similitude, this model would look well in dahlia pink chiffon velvet lined black and gold lamé, the deep pointed scallops at the hem still further enhancing the dahlia impression.

A large share of the success of these wraps rests on the manner in which they are worn, and they require wearing, and not merely to be dropped on the shoulders and left, the fronts usually being drawn together with one hand, so that a slim appearance may be brought about at the hem, which serves to throw up in greater relief the important fullness of the shoulders and collar.

Because of its great adaptability black chiffon velvet is certain to remain in favour. A model seen had the uniformity of the circular cut broken and the sombreness of the black relieved by a straight back panel of gold and black brocade of Egyptian design. Over the shoulders the velvet was gauged many times, a line that was continued up the sides of an extremely high collar of the favourite muffled character. And yet another, even more sumptuous, was fashioned of Royal blue and gold brocade, and displayed a long looped-up back, the sides resolving into wide wing sleeves. This, furthermore, boasted a glorious enveloping collar of rat chinchilla.

The place of women's clubs in the life we lead to-day shows no signs of diminishing usefulness, the latest indication of its importance being the news that towards the end of April the Ladies' Imperial Club will reopen in Arlington Street. The club has been distinctly lucky in obtaining the use of a very distinguished and delightful house, and the list of members already includes, among other well known names, those of the Duchess of Abercorn and the Countess of Dunmore.

This Sale affords an opportunity which very rarely occurs of securing a Norfolk Broad which is absolutely secluded and private and free from any possibility of claims of navigation or fishing rights, with great potentialities as a Residential Estate. For its size the Estate presents exceptional sporting facilities and lends itself to the rearing of wildfowl for shooting, while the Broad teems with coarse fish and pike. A large number of pheasants has been killed every year, although the acreage is small, and there are always partridges.—Illustrated particulars, plans and conditions of Sale (1/- each) and orders to view may be had of Messrs. SPELMAN, Norwich and Gt. Yarmouth, at the Estate Exchange, Tokenhouse Yard, London, E.C., and of Messrs. MILLS & REEVE, The Close, Norwich, Vendors' Solicitors.

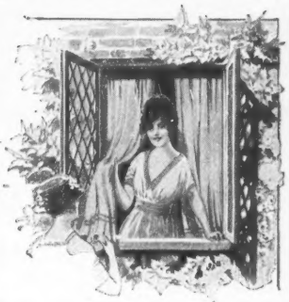
ALLEN'S FADELESS Durobelle

THE ORIGINAL PERMANENT DYE

BIG REDUCTIONS IN PRICE

LOWER costs of raw materials and manufacturing now enable Durobelle fabrics to be sold at substantially reduced prices. As raw cotton has recently advanced to double the figure of a year ago, it may be impossible to maintain the present low prices for any length of time. Therefore, early advantage should be taken of the present offers, as the reductions will show very substantial economies on the renovation of window draperies and coverings.

From first to last you will find Durobelle a true economy. Use Durobelle in the sunniest situations, wash it without fear, for its most delicate shades will remain unaffected even by tropical sun after years of use. You can choose from an immense range of beautiful colours and textures in plain, self-stripes and damask effects.



The 1923 range of distinctive Allen Cretonnes (including Cumberland Prints) is more fascinating than ever, and contains most attractive values. Write for Pattern Book

The Conquest FIRE EXTINGUISHER

Manufactured by the Makers of the Pyrene Fire Extinguisher.

For Country House Protection

TO overcome the prevalence of disastrous Country House fires it is essential that efficient fire protection should be maintained on the spot. One of the most dependable and economical means of providing this is to install the Conquest Fire Extinguisher.

This is a two-gallon extinguisher approved by the Fire Offices Committee. Immediately upon being turned upside down it projects a powerful fire quenching jet in any required direction. The Conquest Extinguisher is effective on all ordinary outbreaks of fire, e.g., woodwork, upholstery and soft goods, paper and similar free burning materials. For highly inflammable substances and electricity the Pyrene Extinguisher is recommended.

Expert Fire Engineering Service.

Illustrations and full descriptions of these and our various other types of fire extinguishers and appliances, together with much useful information on fire prevention and protection, are given in the handbook, "Modern Fire Fighting." This book also outlines our expert fire engineering service for Country Houses. This service includes a free initial inspection of property and any existing fire appliances wherever distance from our nearest office permits.

There is EASE in the "MOLLIS"

The secret of "Mollis" Comfort lies in the spring-filled upholstery, and in the expert construction of every part of this luxurious chair.

The "Mollis" is built to combine the three principles of grace, ease, and durability. The seat is composed of removable double cushions which contain some 200 small resilient, coppered-steel springs close together, but each insulated in its own little pocket to prevent friction. These adjust themselves to every movement and are soft and delightfully comfortable. You just relax completely and the little springs take over their work of giving your body support and ease.

IT IS NOT NECESSARY TO BUILD A NEW HOUSE merely because you want to have Devon fires throughout your home. Scrap your present grates. It is a simple matter to fit DEVON FIRES in their place.

There are SIX EXCELLENT REASONS for doing so: Economy, Appearance, Construction, Labour-Saving, Little Smoke, Easy Fitting. We can only give a full explanation here of one of these reasons. If you are interested in the other five ask your local ironmonger. He is probably a "Devon" Fire enthusiast and will tell you all about them.

Reason No. 5.—Little Smoke.

The "Devon" Fire is as nearly smokeless as modern science can make it. The sloping firebrick back projects over the fire and quickly gains a high temperature. The combustible gases contained in the smoke rising from the fuel on the hearth come in contact with the hot brick back, and are thus ignited and almost entirely consumed by the fire, thereby reducing the volume of unburnt gases (or smoke) passing into the flue.

GRASS SEEDS & COMPLETE GRASS FERTILISER for LAWNS & SPORTS GROUNDS

IT is beyond all doubt, that the wonderful turf of Britain has no equal in any other country in the world, yet notwithstanding the natural climatic advantages enjoyed, it is, also, an undisputed fact that there is to-day much pleasure and sports turf in this country that is by no means in a satisfactory condition.

This applies, more particularly to Grounds and Lawns where it is necessary to carry away the grass as it is cut—an operation that eventually impoverishes the turf unless it is periodically fed with suitable fertilisers—for it is seldom borne in mind that the removal of successive crops of grass in the process of mowing takes the available plant nutrients in the soil to a considerable degree.

In addition, it is necessary to occasionally renovate the sward by sowing a suitable prescription of Grass Seeds. Our extensive knowledge of turf production, and the immense stocks of the most suitable varieties of grass seeds at our command, place us in the best position possible to prescribe and supply appropriate mixtures, as well as to render practical advice as to the correct application of artificial fertilisers.

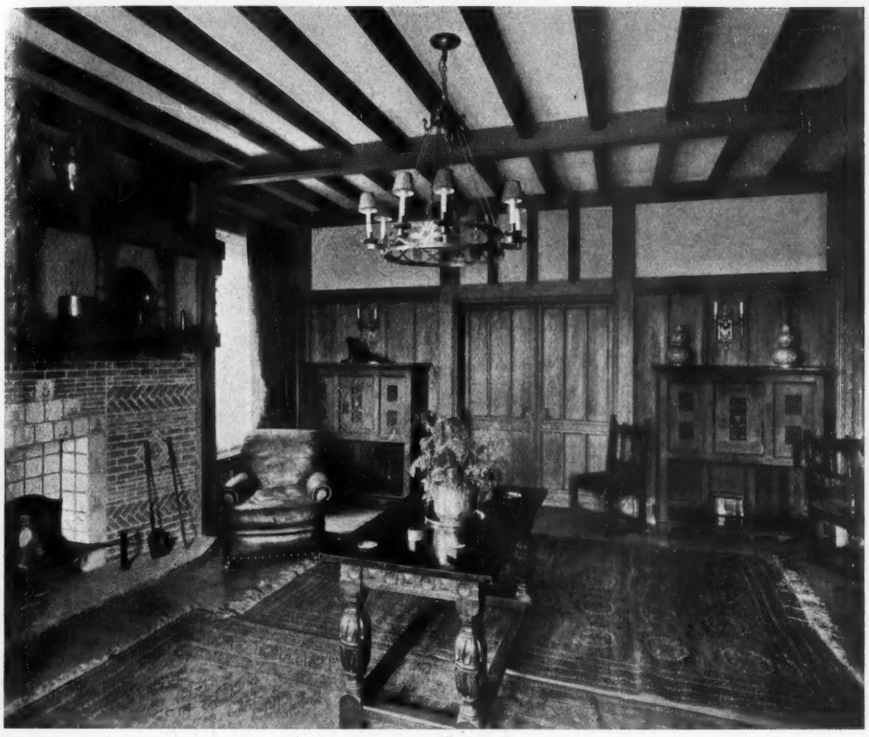
An Interior by Harrods



"BEAUTY is truth, truth beauty," wrote Keats, and the essence of this line is peculiarly applicable to the reproduction of historic styles. The most trivial 'untruth' will mar the harmonious whole.

Harrods bring to the business of interior decoration an organisation that is unsurpassed. Specialists and highly skilled Craftsmen are maintained, and these in turn work under expert supervision.

This illustration shows an Oak-panelled Hall in the late Tudor style, a truly excellent example of the artistic care exercised by Harrods decorators. A feature of outstanding interest is the fireplace of many toned red bricks and Dutch tiles. The furniture and electric fittings are also by Harrods

What is a "Good Gun"?

OPINIONS may, and do, vary as to the precise specification of a good gun, but every experienced sportsman will agree that the following points are of primary importance.

The gun should be sufficiently light and well-balanced to permit of easy, effortless handling for rapid snap shooting. The B.S.A. Shot Gun weighs 6lbs. 12ozs., is beautifully balanced, and handles perfectly.

The trigger Pulls should be crisp and snappy to facilitate quick shooting. The B.S.A. Gun will be found perfect in this respect.

Every part of the gun should be sufficiently strong to withstand any amount of ordinary wear. The B.S.A. Shot Gun is exceptionally strong. Every part is made from the best materials, scientifically selected, rigidly tested, and carefully machined and fitted.

In addition the workmanship that produces the B.S.A. Shot Gun is the finest obtainable, while the reasonable price of the gun makes it a tempting proposition that must appeal to every sportsman.

Your gunmaker will be pleased to show you the B.S.A. Shot Gun.

A NEW ERA IN TENNIS HISTORY

"All Weather" Hard Court at "The Gazeway."

GAZE'S NEW "ALL WEATHER"

GREEN

HARD TENNIS COURT

NO WATERING
NO RESURFACING
NO MARKING TAPES

No upkeep

For many years tennis players have demanded a Green Hard Court, requiring no upkeep and unaffected by extremes of climate.

After long research and experiment, Gaze's have succeeded in manufacturing such a Court as near perfection as ingenuity can devise.

The colour harmonises with the surroundings better than red, and is pleasanter for the players, because there is no glare.

The Gaze green is not sprayed on, but ingrained throughout the whole depth of the surface material. It is indelible, and therefore cannot be erased by wear or weather. No other green, it is believed, is impervious to climatic conditions.

Play can take place during a frost or thaw, and after a snowstorm can proceed as soon as the snow is brushed off the Court.

The white lines are permanently inlaid and never lose their distinctness. The bounce of the ball on the markings is the same as on the rest of the surface.

There is no question of slipping, as the "grip" is perfect.

The initial outlay is higher than on the Red Court, but the cost of upkeep is nil.

The Gaze "All Weather" Green Hard Court is the most economical Court in the world.

Despite the fascination of the new Green Court, its predecessor, the Gaze Red "All Weather," is still in continuous demand. The steady series of "repeat" orders is the best testimony of its good qualities. Hundreds are in use all over Great Britain.

Both Courts—the Red and the Green—can be tested at "The Gazeway," Surbiton, S.W. (Gaze's Tennis Headquarters), either by day or when lit for night play by the patent "NIGHT-AZ-DAY" electric lighting system.

Write to W. Gaze, 19-23, High Street, Kingston-on-Thames, for Illustrated Tennis Booklet 5C, or an appointment to visit "The Gazeway."

THE ESTATE MARKET

AMENITIES OF LONDON SQUARES

RIGHT down to the present day—apart from current protests against the threatened desecration of certain squares in Kensington—the history of London has recorded regrets at the inroads of what may be comprehensively called business necessities upon residential quarters. Lincoln's Inn Fields was an early example, though not the first. For that we must go much farther Citywards. More recently, wealth and assured or aspiring fashion were jostled in the Bloomsbury region, where, notably in Russell Square, a horde of professional societies descended and acquired the fine old town houses as offices. Golden Square and other originally residential spots have long ago been given up to business, which has also wholly captured Hanover Square, and threatens to invade Cavendish Square and other still largely fashionable localities. Before the imperious—and some have even called them impudent—demands of trades and professions, the residents have bowed and retired, for the most part westward, and there sought and found the quietude and other amenities they wished for.

When the incompatibility of trade and residential enjoyment first manifested itself in the City, centuries ago, it is probable that there was a feeling that it was the trader, and not the resident, who ought to seek some more suitable location. Trade prevailed, however, and westwards the march of residential user went. The growth of London, insensibly, in the course of time adjusted matters; but again, once outlying and apparently secure residential quarters are threatened by the incursions of business, which is a term that easily embraces entertainments as now organised.

Only six squares in London can claim greater antiquity than Kensington Square, which, from a period antecedent to the reign of Queen Anne, has enjoyed a reputation for quietude and architectural beauty. Its amenities have been protected by Acts of Parliament, but, according to a protest signed by Mary Lady Ilchester, Lord Finlay and others, the square is imperilled. They say: "We now learn with dismay that a neighbouring commercial firm are definitely threatening to invade the ordinary quiet of the square and to destroy its old architectural beauty by providing facilities for their vans and hoist lifts for their goods in the forecourts and premises of two dwelling-houses acquired by them on the north side of the square. We desire to call public attention to this threat, and we are confident that public opinion and the Borough Council of Kensington will support our protest and obviate the regrettable trouble and expense which those concerned must otherwise incur. Where only money is involved, the claims of historical tradition and architectural beauty should prevail in our great metropolis." Some concern is also felt as to the future of Edwardes Square owing to a scheme for the erection of a place of entertainment in the vicinity.

Lord Wrenbury, who has lived for over thirty years in Melbury Road, the peaceful abode of many artists, has uttered a weighty protest against some of the contemplated, or rumoured, innovations in Kensington. It is not only the dignity and beauty of the Royal borough that must suffer if some of the changes are made, but, for an indefinite period, certainly quite as long as any of the present occupiers and owners have any personal interest in the subject, the transition will inevitably involve a gradual deterioration and depreciation of house property.

There is—as regards some, at any rate, of the schemes—this thought, which adds to the mortification of the residents, that sites at least equally suitable for entertainments could be found elsewhere, in situations which would not be impaired by their establishment. Why should Kensington sites be selected when there is, not far off, the ready-made centre known as the "White City" available, with all its specially provided traffic facilities?

JOHN OTWAY'S HOME SOLD.

MAJOR JOHN UPTON has succeeded in selling, through Messrs. Knight, Frank and Rutley, Ingmire Hall, the ancestral home of the celebrated Royalist, John Otway. The estate is near the road which winds northwards from Sedbergh into Westmorland, across the wildly mountainous country up to the Border. The Hall is a sixteenth century castellated manor house which has been in the possession of the vendor's family for many generations. The grouse moors on Howgill and Cautley Fells, good pheasant shooting, and trout and salmon fishing in the rivers Lune and Rawthey, which bound and intersect the estate, make it a first-rate sporting property. Historically, as the home of Otway, Ingmire is of special interest. Nearly 4,500 acres of outlying portions of the property had already been sold by Messrs. Knight, Frank and Rutley, and the present transaction comprises the mansion, park, home farm, and grouse moors of 11,700 acres.

BILLINGBEAR.

"BILLINGSBARE," (according to the "Topographical Survey of the county of Berks," published in the year 1761) "was for a long time the seat of the Nevils, a branch of the family of the Earls of Abergavenny, and now of the Countess of Portsmouth . . . two miles and a half N.E. of Oakingham" (the modern Wokingham). In the map in the old book the estate is given yet another variant of its name, "Billings Bare." Ashmole, in "Antiquities of Berkshire," published in 1723, reproduces a "Copy of a List of Loyalist Compounders for their Estates (Printed at London, 1655)," among which is found the name of "Richard Nevill of Billingbere, Esquire, £887."

The Billingbear mansion dates from the year 1567 and is of brick, with stone mullioned windows. The Justice Room has a beamed ceiling, enriched frieze, and an antique mantelpiece and overmantel. The original Elizabethan main front and wings of the mansion are still in existence. Five farms and a large area of matured oak woodlands are included in the 1,437 acres, which Messrs. Knight, Frank and Rutley are instructed to dispose of.

Billingbear is a good shooting estate, the woods being well placed and capable of holding a large head of game. We have no records of the sport since the year 1914–15, but at that time the average was quite 3,500 head, of which there were from 1,800 to 2,000 pheasants and plenty of wild duck, with a few woodcock and hares. The park of 430 acres contains oaks and elms of exceptional girth and height, and the grounds are picturesque. The property is five miles from Reading and eight from Windsor, in richly wooded country.

EWELL AND NONSUCH PALACE.

IT is no disparagement of the property illustrated on the front page of the Supplement of COUNTRY LIFE last week, Ewell Castle, to say that nearly all the writers who have dealt with it have enlarged rather upon a neighbouring place than on Ewell Castle. The neighbour, long ago vanished, was Nonsuch Palace, and the imagination may well play around the traditional glories of that palace. However, it is of Ewell Castle that this note treats, and Ewell has little that connects it, other than propinquity, with the palace where Essex was arrested before being conveyed for execution to the Tower.

Early in the last century a wealthy shipowner, Thomas Calverley, commissioned Sir Geoffrey Wyatville, the restorer of Windsor Castle, to build Ewell. The late owner, Captain Clarence Weiner, converted a large area of the grounds into a Japanese garden, in the making of which he employed native artists from Japan. Much of the material and a great quantity of the vegetation came from Japan. Rose temples, bathing retreats, sundials, shelters, and innumerable other components of the Japanese garden make it a wonderfully realistic representation of Far Eastern scenes. The extent of the Castle estate is approximately 45 acres. The vendor is Sir Percival Perry, K.B.E., who has expended many thousands of pounds in remodelling and redecorating the interior, so that Ewell Castle is a comfortable and well appointed residence. If the property is not previously sold in private negotiation it will come under the hammer, at Hanover Square, on Tuesday, May 29th. It is less than half an hour from town by railway and motor car.

A LINK WITH BURNS.

"MRS. FERGUSSON OF CRAIGDARROCH'S Lament for the Death of her Son," as sung by Burns, is recalled by the announcement that Mrs. Smith-Cuninghame is about to dispose of Craigdarroch, Dumfriesshire. The estate of 2,706 acres is near Moniaive, sixteen miles from Dumfries. Craigdarroch House, the main portion of which dates from the seventeenth century, has associations with Annie Laurie (Mrs. Fergusson), who spent her married life there. Moniaive golf course is on the property, which affords grouse and low ground shooting, and trouting in the policies and Craigdarroch Water.

WOOD NORTON: £25,000.

IN the summer of 1919 the late Sir Swinfen Eady, then Master of the Rolls, gave instructions to Messrs. Curtis and Henson to dispose of Wood Norton, in the Vale of Evesham, including the mansion and 3,600 acres. Within a few weeks the firm sold the property for just under £160,000, the buyers, it was understood, being mainly interested in acquiring the agricultural portion. The mansion has just been placed in the hands of Messrs. John D. Wood and Co. for realisation, and they offer it with 680 acres at an "upset" price of £25,000.

Sir Swinfen Eady purchased Wood Norton from the Duc d'Orleans, who, in the year 1898, succeeded the Duc d'Aumale in the ownership. For a while the Comte de Paris resided on the property, in the residence known as Craycombe. At the entrance to the drive, through the park of over a square mile, are magnificent wrought-iron gates which were formerly at the Royal Palace at Versailles. The mansion is most elaborately decorated, revealing the evidences of a lavish expenditure. The Duc d'Aumale laid out fully £100,000 on the mansion, and his successor, the Duc d'Orleans, spent money with a free hand and effected great changes and some improvements. King Edward and other Royal personages were often guests at Wood Norton, and its records contain that of the very brilliant gathering of Royalty in 1907, on the occasion of the marriage of Princess Louise and Prince Charles of Bourbon.

EARLY OWNERS OF BROOME PARK.

SIR BASIL DIXWELL, builder of Broome Park, now to be let as announced in these columns on February 10th, bought the estate from the Diggs family, whose home, certainly as early as the opening years of the sixteenth century, was at Diggs Court, Outelmstone, near Canterbury. The family was an old and important one in East Kent, and their name crops up in connection with the contemplated sale, by Messrs. James Styles and Whitlock, in conjunction with Mr. Finn-Kelsey, of Diggs, Place, Barham. There was a house there before the present one, which is full of the air of antiquity, having open fireplaces, beams and an unspoiled Tudor exterior of mellowed old red bricks. There are 340 acres, including a local beauty spot, "The Heart's Delight."

Hyde Manor, Kingston, near Lewes, an attractive old house, and between 460 acres and 500 acres, has been privately sold by Messrs. James Styles and Whitlock.

Two other old-fashioned country houses have changed hands during the week, one being Widbury Hill, Ware, creeper-clad and standing in about 12 acres, half a mile from the town; and the other, Upper Soldridge Farm, Medstead, near Alton, with 28 acres. The prices obtained by Messrs. Parsons, Clark and Bodin for these properties were, respectively, in round figures, £5,000 and £1,500.

The air of ancient peace is one of the factors in the steady demand for the older type of country house, and buyers are showing a decided preference for houses wherein little or nothing in the way of modern improvements has been carried out. For one thing, such properties are usually to be bought more cheaply, and, for another, they prefer to do improvements themselves. The old residential property known as The Priory, Ilminster, has been sold privately by Messrs. Harding and Harding. It comprises a picturesque house with stone chimneyshafts, mullioned and transomed windows, reception-rooms with carved oak Jacobean chimneypieces, open Tudor stone fireplaces, and oak panelling and beams. In the grounds is a stone building with minstrel gallery, the whole having old-world dignity.

Sales amounting to £11,970, by Messrs. Bruton, Knowles and Co., include Gloucester houses, on the outskirts of the city, and a farm at Westbury-on-Severn. ARBITER.

GLORIES OF CHELSEA

OF the figures representative of the fourth period, when Chelsea porcelain was marked with the gold anchor, the shepherd is the most fascinating. Clad in a coat and breeches of ornate and minute decoration sparkling with gold, his crook leaning against his left arm, his right extended offering a bunch of flowers, his dog at his foot, he makes a gallant figure—a prince masquerading. In equal richness of attire and involved in a wealth of flowers, with her pet lamb in attendance, stands the shepherdess or princess. Both are by arbours of brilliant flowers. There are great groups of this period—for instance, the "Dancing Dogs" and the "Music Lesson," the latter impressed with the letter R, a mark associated with the name of Roubilliac. These are triumphs in modelling, splendour of colour and richness of ornament.

To an earlier period belong two groups of figures of extraordinary interest. The skill in composition of line and mass, the wonderful modelling of drapery and figures, lead to the inevitable conclusion that they are the work of a master hand. They bear the red anchor mark, testifying that they were made between 1750 and 1758, probably about 1750, when Sprimont took over the Chelsea manufactory from Gouyn. There is a strong French influence in these early groups, and if the Roubilliac attribution of them is improbable—is it impossible?

One of these is "Dancing round the Maypole," represented by a number of figures round a mound and facing outwards, the stump and a figure being in the middle. The colours are simple, the dresses have but little ornamentation, the play of line is very fine. The group belongs to Lord and Lady Fisher and was reproduced in COUNTRY LIFE, December 2nd, 1922.

Greater in size, and perhaps in achievement, is the splendid "Chinese Musicians," truly the work of a master. At the first glance the figures suggest dancing more than officiating as an orchestra. There is something in the group of the witchery of Boucher's "La danse chinoise"—wherein it lies is difficult to say. Four figures facing outwards and reclining round a mound or bank sprinkled with flowers and leaves of varying colour, the lines of their limbs and bodies arranged in magnificent decorative sequence, give a series of wonderful and changing compositions as one passes round the group. There is a certain monumental quality in it. The figures are large in treatment, the group reaching 14½ inches.

"CHINESE MUSICIANS," CHELSEA PORCELAIN, 14½ INCHES HIGH.

A woman holding a tambourine aloft in her left hand grasps the stick low in her right, her body seeming to pulsate between the beats. Her white headdress is bound by a red ribbon, her underdress is decorated with sprays of flowers, foliage and a sign, in quiet purples, reds and greens with here and there a deeper note; over it she wears white, upon which is a diaper of sprays of leaves and stems. Her pointed shoes are yellow. Round her waist she wears a black, shaped belt on which is a lattice pattern of golden colour. To her left is a boy, clad in a purple tunic and light lavender blue trousers, ringing a handbell. Turning towards the left, a man places his hand upon the boy's wrist as if to time the music. He wears a Chinese hat with black spike top, red circlet and pink rim. His coat is yellow, adorned with panels of white ground in which are painted ducks and other birds, stems and foliage, with ornament on the field. The delightful green of his trousers is thrown up by the dark boots and the white flower-bank. The remaining figure, a woman, is the most graceful of all. Her black hair is arranged in a

MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS.

Authentic relics of the ill-fated Queen will be sold by auction at Calder House, Piccadilly, towards the end of March. I have departed from my usual rule, and am giving some three to four weeks' notice, the reason being that owing to the exceptional interest of these invaluable relics and in order to secure the best results for the vendors, it is essential, whether they go to the United States or not, that American interest should be invoked and time be given for publicity over there. Obviously American opposition at the sale will all be in favour of the vendors.

There is absolutely no question of the authenticity of these relics. My instructions to sell come from the family in whose possession nine of the relics have been since 1646. These nine were given to Gillies Mowbray, lady-in-waiting, who left them to her granddaughter, Mary Gray. This lady married John Clerk. He bought lands at Penicuik, and their descendant, Sir George N. Clerk, Bart., has instructed me to sell. They consist of (1) small wooden coffer; (2) silk reticule; (3) silk handkerchief; (4) round stone-lidded box; (5) a commemoration medal of Mary's betrothal to Darnley; (6) gem-set pendant with small miniature of the Queen herself, the obverse being a miniature of her son, James I.; (7) enamel and pearl pendant; (8) a gold bead necklet; (9) a lock of Prince Charlie's hair; (10) a beautiful small tortoiseshell hand-painted silk fan; (11) gold watch (a fine specimen made by Hubert, in Rouen, the spring is catgut, the outer case shagreen); (12) diamond, ruby, and pearl-set pendant (called in historical records a solitaire); on the obverse appears: Simplex appares simplicitate, cares. The jewel was a present from the Dauphin of France to Mary on the eve of their marriage, and in some paintings of the Queen it is seen worn by her. Just before her execution this and the watch were given to Massie, one of her French attendants, who followed her, and are being sold by Major Fraser Tytler, to whom they have descended.

The relics will be on view and can be seen at any time on payment of 1s., which will also include a catalogue and photograph. These would be sent post free on payment of this amount. A good photograph of most of the treasures will appear in the Times on Saturday next. It will be readily seen why I have broken my rule of publishing the vendors' names and of giving such early publicity to the sale. My customers know that my practice is to head the announcement either in the advertisements or catalogues in this manner: By order of a nobleman, a countess, and entirely private sources. That usually meets the case.

I will now relate a perfectly true statement of my experiences. For obvious reasons the names of places are changed, and though not exceeded, the figures are altered. A baronet died. A valuer told the executors he would assess the contents of the castle and keep the figures low, thus saving the family something. The signed inventory came to £11,800 for the probate or the death duties. Soon after, the new heir, deciding to sell two pieces of ——, the articles were taken to a well-known auctioneer, who gladly received them for sale, and, as usual, asked that the baronet's name might be printed in the catalogue, as it would help the sale. Permission was given, but unfortunately for the baronet, Somerset House saw the catalogue and the price (£17,500) for which they were sold, and on comparing the figure with the official ones at headquarters, demanded a revaluation of the contents. This amount came to nearly six times as much as the smart valuer had computed it. I always value at 15 per cent. less than the articles would realise at a forced sale, and that is, I believe, what it should be. Honesty is truly the best policy, and as one who values his reputation above all things, I refuse to be a party to fraudulent valuations. Another case: Here again I give the figures rather under the actual. An eccentric millionaire died. His mansion had not had a bit of paint or been repaired for generations. He was a well-known figure in the market place at ——, and would often be seen with a bunch of radishes under his arm. It so happened that the firm who valued the estate knew more about lands than art, and valued two fine Gainsboroughs at 100 guineas—of course, quite ridiculous. My art expert accompanied me through the house to see if there was anything of art value. We only found the two almost priceless pictures, which, in justice to all concerned, we valued at £28,000. Owing to the enormous difference in the two valuations, I was asked to get a third valuation, and agreed on a fee of one hundred guineas. I suggested a famous firm of auctioneers. They preferred to send their report direct to the lawyers, but I saw it later. It was £27,750. I was paid fifty guineas for the part I had played.

Notwithstanding the numerous valuations I have made, only twice have I been challenged.

Some of the most difficult pills I have had to swallow from many of the stream of callers at my office with their jewels and silver are given me when I tell them their real value. They expostulate that the figure I quote was only half of what they were valued for death duties. My reply is: "Some value too high and some too low."

Another illustration: I paid a visit to Scotland two years ago and valued jewels and silver to about £25,000, with a view to selling, but my true values were much less than the Edinburgh firm which had valued for probate. I was ridiculed and told I did not know my business, and did not secure the sale. It took place elsewhere in London and was a perfect fiasco, and nearly all the goods had to be bought in owing to the high reserve placed on the things as a result of the inflated valuation. I have recently secured several of these treasures, and among them was a diamond cross, which sold for £1,750, but which the other auctioneer near by failed to sell. The rest are to come. Referring to me, Truth said: "Experto crede." Surely valuable advice—trust the man who has had experience.

For a fee of 21s. my experts will call when in your vicinity and tell you the value of your treasures. I am now always in attendance at Calder House.

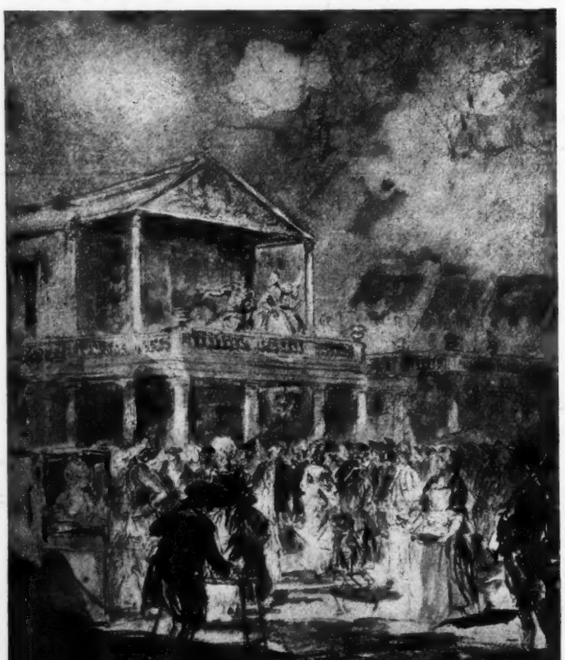
top-knot tied with red ribbon. Her coat is white, with a simple diaper of a shell-like leaf in blue-grey; its lining being pink. Her lower-garment is yellow, over pink shoes.

With the lines of these simple figures the artist has written a lyric, different from the idylls of the later pastoral subjects of the golden anchor period in its simpler quality and deeper strain; for in it there is something monumental—a something, in spite of its French influence, strangely and closely akin to the old English pottery in spirit. It reveals a grandeur unexpected in Chelsea porcelain and is undoubtedly the greatest known work of the manufactory. Had the managers of Chelsea carried on the idea of these great groups English porcelain might have developed a style more original and full of greater possibilities than that which ensued.

We are indebted to Messrs. Stoner and Evans for the illustration from Chelsea porcelain in their possession.

PORCELAIN, DRAWINGS AND ETCHINGS.

From various sources comes the collection of modern pictures and drawings that will be dispersed by Messrs. Christie on March 12th. Part of it was the property of the late Mrs. A. H. Solomons of Queen's Gate Place; another portion, which belonged to the late Thomas Gray of Orlebar, Ham Road, Broadwater, Worthing, is directed to be sold for a commendable object—the benefit of the Artists' Benevolent Fund. On the following day Messrs. Christie will sell Oriental porcelain and objects of art, being the remaining stock of the late Mr. F. Dickinson of 104, New Bond Street, W., and sold by order of the Court of Chancery. Among the porcelain are several armorial pieces, including a teapot, cover, stands and saucer-dishes bearing the arms of the Earl of Egmont. There are two important figures of Kwan-yin, the Goddess of Mercy, the robe of one decorated with blossoms on a stippled green ground, on a lotus pattern pedestal, the hexagonal base showing a river scene and trellis; that of the other, of green and yellow, bears butterflies and flowers. Both are in famille verte and of the K'ang-hsi period. In the same style and period is a pair of dishes painted with landscapes, animals and flowers in shaped panels on a ground of stippled green with green trellis borders. There are several pieces of whole-colour porcelain and some Imari, a few examples of faience—a Hispano-Moresque armorial dish, Persian bowls and Delft dishes; objects of art, and decorative furniture, among which is a French walnut credence of the sixteenth century. Oriental rugs and some useful text books by well known authorities on the fine arts complete the sale.



"LA PARADE CHEZ NICOLET," BY GABRIEL AND AUGUSTIN DE SAINT AUBIN.

Old silver, from Pitchford Hall, Shrewsbury, consisting of cups, sauceboats, salvers and other articles (the principal part being of the Georgian periods), the property of Colonel C. J. C. Grant, with old English silver from different sources, will be sold by Messrs. Christie on March 14th, and on the following day they will dispose of porcelain and furniture, the property of the late J. Tayleur of Buntingsdale Hall, Market Drayton, with other decorative furniture and objects from various sources. On March 16th they will sell old pictures from different properties, including that of Sir John Walsham, Bart., of Knill Court, Hereford.

"La Parade chez Nicolet," by Gabriel and Augustin de Saint Aubin, which was described in this column a fortnight ago, is now illustrated. Together with nine other drawings by the Saint Aubins, Hubert Robert, Guardi, Lancret and Boucher, it is to be sold at Sotheby's on March 22nd. "Nicolet's" was the open-air Théâtre Nicolet, opened in the Boulevard du Temple not long before the Revolution.

A very interesting sale of modern etchings, with some aquatints, mezzotints and water colour drawings, will be held by Messrs. Sotheby on March 14th and the ensuing day. The first day's sale will include a fine series of prints by Augustus E. John, soft-ground etchings and aquatints by Nelson Dawson, and very important etchings, such as the splendid impressions of "A Sunset in Ireland" in second state, signed by Sir F. Seymour Haden, and "The Great Gantry, Charing Cross," in fourth state, by Muirhead Bone. The chief feature of the sale is an extraordinary collection of etchings and engravings by Sir Frank Short, which originally belonged to him and is now the property of Mr. C. Stirling Lee of Graiseley Cottage, Wolverhampton. There are some 500 impressions offered as a set, all the examples being of the first quality. It forms a record of the life-work, published or unpublished, of Sir Frank Short—with the exception of a few later plates. There are many unrecorded proofs, early states, etchings for mezzotints and other rarities dear to the amateur and collector. It is difficult to make distinction, but Messrs. Sotheby have selected for illustration "Evening, Bosham," "Low Tide, the Evening Star, and Rye's long Pier deserted," and "A Wintry Blast on the Stourbridge Canal," a drypoint, showing leafless trees bending to the wind, tall chimneys rising from the lower ground, and the canal in the foreground. Like the first, the second day's sale is derived from various sources. It will deal with etchings of the British school (among which is a superb impression of "Somerset House," by Muirhead Bone), water colour drawings by British artists, and a fine series of English coast scenes and landscapes by Nelson Dawson.

A representative selection of works of art by Nelson Dawson will be sold by Messrs. Sotheby on March 16th. There are examples from his private pottery, which was discontinued owing to the war, ironwork, bronzes, enamels, silverwork and jewellery. From another pottery of great fame (now closed), conducted by the brothers Martin in the suburbs, comes the last item of 151 pieces of "Martin" ware, selected principally between 1895 and 1905.

At their sale of silver and jewellery on March 2nd Messrs. Robinson, Fisher and Harting obtained £355 (Harris) for a set of five eight-point stars, set with numerous brilliants, each with a large central stone, while a flexible necklet of fourteen pear-shaped links, large centre and two side medallions, the whole composed of numerous brilliants, with gold connecting chain, brought £144 (Money).

THE AUTOMOBILE WORLD.

THE HIGHEST MOTOR ROAD IN EUROPE.—I

WHAT do motorists know of passes who have not crossed the Stelvio? We thought we knew a great deal! We still consider that the scenery on the Grimsel and the Rolle is more varied and beautiful, and the Splügen was even more difficult to negotiate with the extra long wheel-base of our "Rolls." The Splügen, also, runs the Stelvio very close as a tour de force of road engineering, though it is much narrower.

But the Stelvio is unique, in spite of the prosaic poste-'bus which rumbles over it daily. It is the highest motor road in Europe and the second highest in the world. What other pass can boast an altitude of 9,200ft., with eighty hairpin corners and a rise of 6,000ft. in 15½ miles? We had planned that crossing the Stelvio should be the crowning achievement of our tour in Central Europe last summer, and so it was, but not quite according to plan!

"Brunhilde" is the name of our 40-50 h.p. Rolls-Royce; she has an open touring body, especially designed for comfort and convenience on long distance tours abroad. The chassis is 6ins. longer than the standard, which gives room for two spare seats in the back; we leave these behind when we go abroad, and in their place we stow all our small gear: three suit-cases, a large reflex camera, map and despatch cases, etc. Thus, with two big suit-cases in the Brookes trunk behind, we managed to take all our luggage for a two months' trip in Switzerland, Austria and Italy.

Messrs. Rolls-Royce overhauled the brakes before we left and fitted an extra speedy fan in place of the standard one; otherwise the car was exactly as we use her in England.

Our party consisted of four—my husband, a girl friend, myself, and the chauffeur. We had left England on July 22nd, and had spent three weeks on the Swiss passes and three more among the incomparable Dolomites. August 30th found us at Meran, en route for the Stelvio. It was later than we had intended, but we had no misgivings, as the pass is officially open until October 15th (though seldom practicable after September).

At Meran our luck deserted us, and the weather, which had hitherto been lovely, broke up in a violent thunderstorm, and we were obliged to wait there three days in pouring rain. August and September are the dead season in Meran; the Hotel Meranerhof was understaffed and very expensive and the place stuffy and deserted; so, when the weather showed signs of improving on September 2nd, we decided to go on to Trafoi and wait there till it should finally clear up.

The drive up the Adige valley is lovely, but the road was bad and full of pot-holes. We reached Trafoi in two hours—a distance of 56½ miles from Meran. At Neu Spondinig the road reaches a cul de sac, formed by the mountains of the Unter Engadin; it branches to the right over the Reschern Scheidegg to Landeck in Austria, and to the left over the Stelvio (or Stilsfer Joch) to Bormio and Lake Como.

The Stelvio really begins at Neu Spondinig, whence the road rises 3,000ft. in 8 miles to Trafoi; it winds through a narrow valley crossing and recrossing a mountain stream; there are several acute corners, but the road surface is excellent. Rounding the last corner we came suddenly in view of Trafoi, nestling at the foot of the great Madtch Glacier, and crowned by the Ortler peaks, one of the most beautifully situated villages in Europe.

We arrived at Trafoi in pouring rain and put up at the Hôtel de la Poste (before the war there was a large hotel-de-luxe, which has been burnt down). Nothing could be more comfortable than the Poste: simple and unpretentious, the food is excellent, the rooms clean and pleasant, hot baths are obtainable at any hour, and the terms are very moderate. The rain continued all that night and next day, the valley was enveloped in a thick mist. Hope springs eternal in the human breast, and, together with other disappointed motorists and thwarted alpinists, we spent the morning tapping the barometer and heartening ourselves with deceptive bits of blue sky. In the afternoon my friend and I braved the elements on foot. Two hours' steady climbing up a steep mountain path behind the hotel brought us out above the trees. Here we found several lines of trenches, dug-outs and pill-boxes beautifully constructed in the side of the mountain overlooking the pass; all the galleries are lined with concrete, and look as if they had been built to last for ever. The Stelvio was an important outpost of the war area. On the summit three frontiers met—Austria and Italy to the north and south and Switzerland on the west. Now that Italy has annexed Tyrol the pass is, of course, all Italian, the Swiss frontier bordering it on the west.

Next morning we awoke to a white world. It had snowed all night in the mountains, which were covered with a fresh white blanket. Snow lay even on the lower slopes below the tree line, which is at about 6,000ft. to 7,000ft., so we feared there might be a lot on the pass at 8,000ft. and 9,000ft. The question was, what were we to do? We could not remain indefinitely at Trafoi. Three cars had gone up the pass while we dressed and had not returned, so I voted we should go up the pass as far as possible. It was bitterly cold, and wrapped in our thickest furs we started off at 9.30 a.m., in spite of the warnings of the kind proprietor.

After Trafoi, the road is simply a series of windings, with hair-pin corners all the way up to the summit. We reversed on about five or six without adventure; then snow began to make the road very slippery and the corners more difficult. Higher up the snow got much deeper, and we followed in the wheel-tracks of the cars that had preceded us. We crawled up to a corner, allowed the car to run gently back for two yards as usual, and then put her in first speed, but, instead of starting forward again, the wheels flew round on the ice and she would not budge! With great difficulty we got her going again. There was no possibility of turning round before we should reach Franzenshohe (the first hospice on the way up), which we could see ahead of us.

Only one more hairpin to negotiate! But this time we got fairly stuck in the snow reversing, and not only did we fail to go forward, but, being on a slope, every time the wheels flew round the car slipped backwards nearer and nearer the edge of the precipice! Luckily, a road-mender appeared and dug away the snow from under the wheels while we pushed, and at last the tyres got a grip of the road and we were able to run on into the yard of the hostel.

Here we found several other stranded cars and their owners. With the latter we ruefully surveyed the snowy wastes ahead, the overcast sky and the road up which we had come and down which we should probably have to return—a most unpleasing prospect! We were told that a snow-plough had started early in the morning from the Italian side and was expected to reach Franzenshohe about 11 a.m., so we decided to wait and hear its report. The chauffeur busied himself removing the discs from the wheels and binding ropes and chains round them. We went into the inn and dried our shoes and drank excellent hot café au lait.

Presently, much to our amazement, the poste-'bus lumbered up and disgorged its load of excited and alarmed passengers. There were no English among them, and their ideas of a suitable costume for travelling over mountain passes in deep snow were incredibly funny. Two Italian ladies were attired in silk dresses, thin silk stockings and patent leather shoes! Another wore a white outfit suitable for the tropics. The men wore deer-stalker hats with smart blue suits and tennis shoes. Needless to say, they were all shivering with cold.

We watched the snow-plough's slow descent from the summit with interest. On its arrival at 11.30 we found that our hopes of crossing the Stelvio that day were doomed. Drawn by three horses, the plough had only cleared a narrow track in the middle of the road, and the driver reported that there was even more snow on the other side and that it lay in drifts 9ft. deep on the top. The pass was impossible for motors.

There was nothing for us to do but to return the way we had come. We took some photographs in spite of the bad light and then retraced our way slowly and gingerly down the pass. It was not quite so bad as we had expected, as the road-men had swept away the snow from the corners. The travellers in the poste-'bus had elected to remain at Franzenshohe (where the accommodation is very crude), but eventually they must have beaten an ignominious retreat, as we did, for the bad weather continued for three weeks after this.

THE SECOND ATTEMPT:
THE TWO CARS ON THE SUMMIT, 9,041ft.

Our fury and disappointment can be imagined, for we felt that our trip was incomplete with the Stelvio unconquered! We vowed to return to the attack should the opportunity occur.

It did, some three weeks later!

Driving over Pot-Holes.

A QUITE interesting and somewhat controversial point was suggested recently during a prolonged drive over most abominable roads. When a road consists of little more than a series of holes connected by ridges of more or less loose stones, is it better to dodge the holes as far as possible or to steer a straight course and ignore their presence? Naturally, when meeting an isolated hole or bump on an ordinary road any driver will take the precaution of steering round it, provided that he sees it in time and that his speed will allow of the necessary deviation from normal course. But is this necessarily the wisest plan when dodging one pothole means simply dropping into another, even if the second be not quite so big and deep as the first?

There are some drivers who go so far as to say that it does not pay to indulge in rapid and perhaps violent swerves simply to avoid a bump, and their reasoning is—superficially, at any rate—quite plausible. They say that if a car takes a bump or hole longitudinally—i.e., parallel to its direct path of normal travel—the shock is met by the springs and the remainder of the chassis in the way in which they are best suited to take it. The shock is "square" to the tyres and to the body and "parallel" to the springs and chassis frame. If the car be swung partially round and while escaping one shock yet encounters a shock from, perhaps, the spreading edges of the hole or one of its lesser neighbours, the shock so received takes the car off its balance, so to speak. More accurately, the shock is a transverse one, at least partially, and it seems very sound reasoning that a comparatively slight transverse shock may well exercise more injurious effects on a chassis than a bigger shock taken by components as they are designed to take it.

Thus it may be urged that on a very bad road the direction of travel should be kept as near to a straight line as is reasonably possible. It may be that more shocks will be encountered than would be the case were the car steered to avoid the biggest of the holes.

It may even be that some of the shocks will be bigger than those that would have been met had the biggest holes been avoided and only the smaller ones taken, although there is room for much doubt on this point in view of the fact that the road is supposed to be a mass of really bad inequalities. But in any case the shocks that are received will be received in the best possible way, and their effects on the whole of the mechanism of the car and also on the tyres will be considerably less injurious than they might well have been if accepted "transversely."

There are two further points that may be indicated. The first is that when a car makes a sudden swerve to avoid a bump and encounters another, it is highly improbable that the second one will be received at all squarely, even if the first be escaped altogether. The second is that a bad road surface owes its badness to the injuries inflicted by traffic. Therefore the inequalities are, in a sense, arranged in lines—lines approximately following

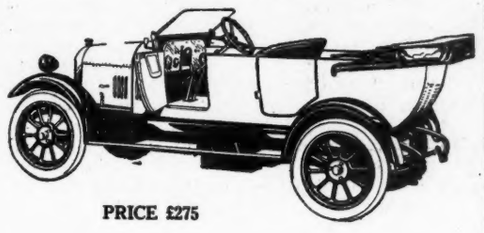
No. 1. THE 11.9 MORRIS-COWLEY



PRICE £275

THIS is, perhaps, the most interesting of all the 1923 Morris Cars—not because it is essentially a better car than any of the other Models (all 11.9 Morris engines and chassis are identical), but because it costs so little to buy.

With a luxury equipment of Lucas Dynamotor Starter-lighting set, 3 12-volt lamps, Smith Speed-indicator and 8-day Clock, 5 Wheels fitted with Dunlop Cord Tyres, Oil and Petrol Gauges, Wefco Spring Gaiters and Enots Pump Chassis Lubrication, the price is £275—a figure which would have seemed impossible in 1914, the "cut-price" year. Needless to say, this is, like all Morris Cars, an "IMSHI"—the Car which set a New Standard for its Class.

This is the first time you have been able to buy a Rich Man's Car at a Poor Man's Price.

Other prices:—from £225 to £390, for Two-seaters, Four-seaters (All-weathers) and Coupés in the 11.9 and 13.9 Series.

NAPIER
The Proved Best

THE ultra modern design of the 40/50 h.p. Six Cylinder Napier—the only model we now manufacture—gives it an extraordinary acceleration, hill climbing capabilities and low running costs. These results are obtained by reason of the Napier's remarkable—

Low Weight to Power Developed

"AN outstanding feature of the Napier is the remarkably low weight to power ratio, a fact which contributes to the marvellous acceleration and low running costs. Phenomenal hill climbing powers, economy in tyres and low petrol consumption are other benefits which naturally follow the intrinsic principle of the design."

—Car and Golf, Nov., 1922.

As satisfactory and reliable on the road as the Napier Aero Engine is in the air.

the direction of movement of the traffic. Thus, by following the same lines, presumably more or less straight, that other traffic has followed, a car will be following the line of least resistance. If it deviates from these lines, and frequently crosses them, it is making obstacles for itself—witness what happens when one crosses badly laid or worn tramlines at an angle as contrasted with following them as closely as possible.

Brooklands Track as a Testing Ground.

IN view of the frequent references that appear in these pages to the performances of cars on Brooklands Track, special interest attaches to an article in the Auto by a regular contributor, "Omega," on the differences that are to be observed between the performances of a car on the Brooklands Track and on the road. It is a very widespread fallacy that the track constitutes a perfect running surface for the average car and that any car may be expected to put up a better performance on the track than it would on the ordinary main road. Nothing is further from the truth, and it is a fact that whatever the maximum speed of the car on the track that figure is likely to be exceeded on the average main road provided there is sufficient room to allow the car to get up to its maximum speed and maintain it without any necessity for stops or slowing down owing to the exigencies of traffic.

When it was new the track may have provided a better surface than the road, but to-day, in spite of frequent patching up repairs, the track is much rougher than first class main roads, while it will not bear comparison with some of our particularly good highways, such as the Bath Road. The track, in a word, provides further evidence, if such were necessary, of the futility of patching a surface that is to carry vehicular traffic. The track has become so bad that some sort of repair is absolutely necessary, but it would be idle to pretend that such repairs as have been conducted make the surface one of even a fair quality. These facts should be borne in mind whenever the speed of a car on Brooklands Track is referred to, and especially in connection with such events as the 200 miles race of the Junior Car Club held annually and in the long distance events such as two or more hour records.

A car that will lap Brooklands at 60 m.p.h. should, under reasonably favourable conditions be capable of attaining at least 70 m.p.h. on the road, while 75 would be a more probable figure, with, of course, the always present proviso that the conditions obtaining on the road at any given moment are conducive to the attainment of a high speed. The reasons that higher speeds are attained on Brooklands than are chronicled as being attained on the road are fairly obvious—that speeds are permissible on the track which are not permissible on the road and, moreover, there are no contrary factors, such as traffic, to prevent the attainment of such speeds.

Cyclists and Rear Lights.

THE following letter regarding the rear-light problem puts forward a view that has not been given prominence, but that certainly has an element of common-sense to back it:

SIR,—I think that the rear-lamp question automatically resolves itself into two portions, affecting town and country districts respectively. I wish to put forward a plea, not necessarily for universal rear lights, but for uniformity. I find in town driving that the sudden transition from a brilliantly lighted thoroughfare to a poorly illuminated street—and there are many even in the heart of London, and many more in the suburbs—is most confusing. One cannot in decency use one's head lamps; one cannot, in common-sense, halt until one's eyes are accustomed to the change. If a bicycle without a rear lamp happens to be in the road immediately round the corner after such a sudden transition, it simply cannot be seen. Further, a certain large proportion of cyclists still use rear lamps or reflex arrangements, although there is no legal necessity, while others use nothing. Thus, one may form a mental habit of watching for the little, low red gleam and fail to see the only part of the combination of man and unlighted machine that presents any real substance—the body of the rider. In this respect it would be better if the law said definitely that cyclists must not use rear lamps, than merely that they need not. Better still if it said that they must. I am aware that I have only touched the verge of the lighting question, but this lack of uniformity even among cyclists themselves seems to me to aggravate the danger.—MOTORIST.

AIR MINISTRY OFFICIALS INSPECT NEW TYPE AMPHIBIAN MACHINE.

THE DUKE OF SUTHERLAND, Under-Secretary of State for Air, together with Air Vice-Marshal Vyvyan, General Bagnall Wild and other representatives of the Air Ministry, visited the Supermarine Aviation Works at Southampton recently, where they inspected the Supermarine-Napier Seagull Amphibian. This is a new type of flying boat which has now been successfully tested. It has a seaworthy hull and is capable of riding at anchor in the roughest sea, while by lowering its under-carriage it can, if necessary, alight on land. They also showed great interest in the Supermarine-Napier flying boat which regained the Schneider Cup in August last, bringing to England the only International air trophy won by Great Britain since the war.

A motor-car discovery: the perfectly-balanced 'four'

The harmonic balancer invented by Dr. F. W. Lanchester, F.R.S., M.Inst.C.E., gives the 23-60 h.p. Vauxhall engine of four cylinders the same balance, and consequently the same smoothness of running, as if it had six cylinders. Cost is saved and there are fewer potential sources of trouble. In this ingenious device British inventiveness has achieved a notable advance in motor-car design. "This is really an extraordinarily cheap car," writes Mr. H. Massac Buist, after a trial of the 23-60 h.p. Vauxhall 'Kington' touring car, "in face of its quality and performance."

NEW MODES AND MATERIALS IN COAT-FROCKS

GIRDLES OF DYED STRAW AND POSIES OF TINTED IVORY.

THERE is a determined iconoclastic spirit at large just now in the world of dress. Expressive shrugs and uplifted eyebrows are beginning to greet the mention of jumpers, for example. Not that we shall for a moment discard this jolly slip-on garment for specialised occasions and services. "But a shirt blouse, Madam, would look so much better with that coat and skirt" is the sort of remark we are likely to encounter, for the blouse elaborate and the shirt simple are unquestionably coming into their own again. The shirts are especially demure, with their quaint little round turn-down collars. And these, too, are commanding a price, since they require to be perfectly cut and made of the richest quality crêpe de Chine or heavy China silk. A small, unpretentious black ribbon bow is usually worn at the throat, the narrow ends tucked into the waist.

That is one upheaval. Then another is the progressive character of the coat-frock. The new models seem to bear no sort of resemblance to the old-time shapeless sacque-like affairs, for they are quite elaborately fashioned, the backs frequently differing from the fronts, the latter in many instances revealing a suspicion of drapery, and those of superfine character are all tailor handled.

At such establishments as that of Madame Barri, 33, New Bond Street, since this enterprising couturière has moved from Baker Street to her present palatial and artistically got-up abode in Bond Street, things have been moving rapidly. The purchase—lock, stock and barrel—of the business of John Simmons and Sons of the Haymarket was a veritable tour de force, the wonderfully trained staff of this past-master in the tailoring art being removed to the above address, where they are kept busy building the most perfect tailor-made suits and coat-frocks the most fastidious heart of woman could desire to find. There is, for example, the coat-frock illustrated of grey repp cloth, the beautifully straight back terminating at a long line, where the lower or skirt part is mounted in flat pleats, the front being modelled all in one, the right side carried across in a graceful diagonal line to end in a few discreet draperies at the other, these punctuated by a cut steel buckle. The long, narrow lapels are of white piqué worked at the edges with grey silk, the soft high roll-over collar and the exceedingly pretty, neat finish accorded the sleeves all adding to the covetable appearance of this chic model. Equally fresh and attractive in expression is another coat-frock of pale fawn wool marocain, one of the best worn wool weaves of the season. This features a straight back with narrow belt, the fulness in front being stitched in clustered groups of horizontal tucks across the front that in some mysterious way resolve into outstanding pockets—a really expert piece of ingenious sartorial workmanship.

Country suits are a further big speciality in these salons and, as goes without saying, something wholly out of the ordinary is employed for them. There is, in particular, an exceedingly soft flannel, striped or checked with fine contrasting lines. Thus a grey ground has a stripe of black slightly heavier than a companion stripe of white, while a warm brown shade the tone of rich loam is boldly checked in black and white. The fashioning is always supremely simple, the coats loose, with capacious pockets, and belted at a low line.

It is of special interest to learn that Madame Barri has just returned from Paris, where she has not only bought with a prodigal hand, but has all that is of the latest and most exclusive in ideas up her sleeve. Bridal gowns and trousseaux are especially emphasised, and prominent among the bridal toilettes is one of heavy white marocain, hand embroidered in lines that curve away at the back, wrought in fine paste and beads. Scottish readers will rejoice to hear that Madame Barri is to show many of her lovely wares in Edinburgh, at the North British Hotel, on the 19th and 20th of this month.

Plissés and small flat tucks play an important part in connection with self-toned Georgette and the more flexible fabrics. Fashioned of small box-pleated panels, each one set in a plain narrow hem, was a black Georgette, the almost normal waist line defined by a girdle of straw flowers dyed in tender shades of brown, golden brown, red and green. And à propos of flowers for wearing in the lapel buttonhole of coats, the last word is expressed in tinted ivory flowers, just a single bloom, no foliage. L. M. M.

ADVICE AS TO FIRE PROTECTION.

MOST owners of country seats are aware of the danger of fire, but for very many of them the dread remains a threatening cloud on the horizon because they are not clear in their own minds as to what precaution will adequately meet the danger, and accordingly they take none. The Pyrene Company, well known as the makers of most effective fire extinguishers, have organised a special fire inspection service, the latest acquisition to their staff being Major Crook, until recently Chief Inspector of the Fire Services of the Army and Royal Air Force. His expert advice is placed, without entailing any expense, at the disposal of owners of country seats who wish for information as to fire risks and protection. Applications for Major Crook's services should be addressed to The Pyrene Company, Limited, 9, Grosvenor Gardens, S.W.1.

FOR AFFECTIONS OF THE TEETH.

Such complaints as pyorrhea are far too common, and in a great many cases the treatment recommended has been to extract all the teeth; a drastic course, since no artificial substitutes can really take their place. Dr. B. Kritchevsky, Joint Professor of the French School of Stomatologie. Paris, and Dr. P. Seguin of the Pasteur Institut of Paris have discovered a formula which Sealand Trading Limited of 24, Holborn, E.C.1, are putting on the market under the name of "Sanogyl." It is a paste, and it is recommended that it should be brushed on the teeth, around them and on the gums and retained for a minute or two before the mouth is rinsed in order that it shall penetrate all the cavities. From the recommendations of dentists, hospitals and the medical Press it would appear that "Sanogyl" is a certain cure for such diseases as pyorrhea alveolaris, mercurial stomatitis, gingivitis and scurvy. This is good news indeed in view of the problems of our national dental condition to-day.

THE PACKING OF OBJETS D'ART.

The packing and removing of antique valuables and objets d'art is an exacting business requiring the utmost efficiency and expert knowledge. Messrs. T. Rogers and Co., for over thirty years with the late R. Robson of 10, Bruton Street, have established themselves at 14, Mason's Yard, Duke Street, St. James's, S.W., and their long experience of work in connection with many well known firms is a guarantee of their proficiency. Work for private owners as well as for the antique trade will be undertaken.

BUILDING A HOUSE.

To live in a house one has built and see one's individual ideas realised is a very delightful thing, and within the reach of very many people who yet do not take advantage of it. It seems rather a formidable undertaking, there are so many points to be considered, and the question of cost is apt to be intimidating. Messrs. Boulton and Paul's booklet of "Ideal Homes" illustrates a great many houses and bungalows which they have built in many different parts of the country. Plans, specifications and prices are given, and the booklet is very clear and well illustrated. Messrs. Boulton and Paul's catalogue will certainly solve for many people the problem of how to build a house. Their address is Norwich.

AN ATTRACTIVE BUNGALOW BY MESSRS. BOULTON & PAUL.

"NEW WORLDS FOR OLD."

"New Worlds for Old" is the title of a film dealing with the European relief work of the Society of Friends, which has just been released and will, it is hoped, be shown at many meetings throughout the country. It is also available for exhibition at any cinema. It deals chiefly with the more cheerful side of the work, but manages to convey a vivid idea of the horrors of famine. Enquiries about the film should be sent to Miss A. Ruth Fry, Friends' Relief Committee, 10, Fetter Lane, E.C.4.

A SUBTLE TESTIMONIAL.

There is a subtle testimonial in the fact that a well known firm has found it necessary to take on larger premises, which is emphasised in the case of Messrs. H. L. Savory and Co., Limited, so well known for their cigarettes and cigars, by the very general appreciation of their wares. They have just moved from their Piccadilly address to 178, New Bond Street, W.1, which is directly opposite Burlington Gardens, where their new establishment is most luxuriously appointed and stocked with many thousands of pounds' worth of finest cigars and cigarettes. There is a cigar sampling room where, under ideal conditions, customers may test the flavour of a fresh Havana cigar or a delicate cigarette of Virginia or Turkish tobacco. Messrs. Savory's cigars are made in Cuba, of course, but all Savory cigarettes in a model works not far from Bond Street, where also are prepared the boxes and tins specially constructed to retain tobacco flavour and quality for an indefinite period. Messrs. Savory hold an extraordinary number of Royal warrants, including, of course, that of H.M. King George V.

VISIT THE BUNGALOW OR OUR GALLERIES and you will be certain to purchase antique furniture in preference to new.

WE SHALL ALWAYS BE PLEASED TO SUBMIT YOU ESTIMATES FOR YOUR HOME in competition with firms who supply modern furniture,

AND PROVE TO YOU THAT YOU CAN FURNISH BETTER AND CHEAPER IN ANTIQUES.

Your furniture will then be distinctive; your house will be homely and restful. All the fine mansions and houses in England are furnished in antiques. Look at the illustrations of them in COUNTRY LIFE.

SEWAGE PURIFICATION

The Plumbing at your Country House may be modern, but have you satisfied yourself regarding final treatment of the sewage? Some better provision than the insanitary cesspool is called for as an insurance against ill health. "Safety First" is wisely applied against poisoning by septic liquids discharged to country ditches.

Apart from the menace to health, cesspools are prohibitive in cost when you consider pumping and cartage charges.

The effluent from our schemes is comparable to rainwater, free from smell, and incapable of causing a nuisance.

Sir Frederick Fison, Bart., writes: "The sewage plant which you put down at Boarzell, 10 years ago has worked excellently."

Other letters:

". . . . . your system is practically automatic and requires very little attention indeed, which in these difficult days of labour is a great advantage."

"The installation has been working quite well, and is very satisfactory."

One Spring Cleaning Instead of Two

IF you have your new gas appliances—fires, water-heater, or cooker—fixed at once, you will not need to have a second "spring cleaning" later in the year, when the fitters finish their work. Besides, you will find that the "spring cleaning" will be much more easily accomplished if you have the assistance of the gas appliances. A gas cooker and gas water-heater do not involve domestic disorganisation through the visits of the sweep. Plentiful hot water is the first essential of successful spring cleaning and this is guaranteed by the gas water-heater. With a gas wash copper and gas iron you can wash your curtains, hangings and covers at home without the drudgery of old-time washday; they will keep their shape and colour better and you will save money. Gas fires make no dust and dirt; they reduce domestic labour and so leave time for other lighter work.

Handy Wire Netting. No. 1

Keeping Frost Off

SEVERAL correspondents point out that wire netting of not too large a mesh will keep frost off potatoes and early vegetables. The following letter puts it very well:—

Deeping St. James, Lincs.

Sir,

Two years ago I had a small garden in which were potatoes and other things all growing nicely. They were early potatoes, but to my surprise one morning I found the frost had cut most of them off, so on the same day I sat and considered what I should do with them. Suddenly, the thought came to me to try some wire netting, as I had got by me 30 yards of ordinary chicken wire. I put enough stakes in the ground to cover 30 yards, and nailed the wire to the stakes a foot above the ground over the potatoes just to see if my remedy was any good. The following morning I was pleased to find the potatoes were quite alright and the frost was hung on to the wire netting like a cloth. I spoke about it to other company and they all tried it and found it successful.

Yours, etc.

There isn't much to add to that save that the smaller the mesh the better it will keep off the frost, and that if you want the netting to last and stand up to any other little job you may find for it when the potatoes are up, you'd better be sure that you get B.W.N.M.A. netting, and look for the label on it when you buy it.

B.W.N.M.A. Wire Netting is supplied in many different sizes. Your ironmonger can advise you. If he cannot, write to the B.W.N.M.A. and they will tell you.

British Wire Netting (B.W.N.M.A. Brand) is supplied in 50-yard rolls, or shorter lengths, by all ironmongers.

"DECORATION—ITS USES & ABUSES"

MUCH has been written about the decoration of the home, but it is an inexhaustible subject of interest to the vast majority of people, for it may safely be said that the British live more in their homes and take more pride in their houses than the people of other nations. This being so, it is hard to understand how, time after time, those who are anxious to have their homes as perfect as the art of the decorator can make them employ firms who are not decorators to carry out their work, and it is only when it is too late they realise that they will not get their ideas materialised, and the final result is a constant source of annoyance. It does not seem to be realised that firms doing good decorative work employ a class of workmen who are undoubtedly artists, and these men are extremely hard to find in these days when the old school is dying out, and because so many boys are not now apprenticed to their work the young man has not the knowledge or skill of his father and grandfather.

"The Grange," Highgate, London, N. South Elevation.

It is not difficult to find plenty of men who can do inferior class work, but it is usually disastrous to employ them on really good work, and in consequence the value of employing a decorator who has a staff of artists cannot be overestimated. Moreover, it must be remembered that the good men cost no more than the bad. Apart from the workmen, the question of the principals of the firm naturally plays a large part. To have the personal superintendence of a man who has studied decoration in England and on the Continent, who has taste, and who is able to install a perfect harmony in the home, makes all the difference. Such a firm is Godfrey Giles & Co., of 18, Old Cavendish Street. Mr. Godfrey Giles, F.I.B.D., the senior partner, has studied decoration in all periods, and when a reproduction of an Adam, Georgian or other classic-style room is required, the matter can be left in his hands with confidence, and the perfect room will be evolved. A room of this description is illustrated, and the purity of the detail can clearly be seen—the Grinling Gibbons carving reproduced in the chimney breast, the overdoors, the panel mouldings, and the decorated skirting are truly delightful.

The Drawing Room.

The colouring of the room is carried out in soft shades of greys, the mouldings being wiped and glazed. This is set off by the rich blue of the carpet and curtains, and the beautiful royal blue and gold silk brocade of the furniture; the whole scheme, including the furnishings, being carried out under Mr. Godfrey Giles' supervision.

The house in which this work was carried out is "The Grange," Highgate (a picture of the exterior is also shown). It is a very beautiful residence, the property of Mr. T. B. Taylor. It is built in red brick, mellowed with age, with stone dressings and parapets. The interior has fine spacious and comfortable rooms, including an entrance and lounge hall, from which runs the oak staircase, and as one goes from room to room one realises the folly it would be to allow a contractor who had no taste to ruin the harmony of such a beautiful home.

Mr. and Mrs. Taylor are well known for their hospitality and kindness, in putting the house and beautiful grounds at the disposal of various charities. Recently the Charity Organisation Society held a meeting under the chairmanship of Countess Ferrars; Lady Emmott has spoken on the housing problem, and a meeting of the National Council of Women was held, when the Lady Francis Balfour presided. The beautiful grounds cannot be passed by without comment, particularly the wonderful herbaceous border which runs through the kitchen garden, and has already been illustrated in "Country Life."

Having quoted the example of Godfrey Giles & Co. as a firm who really do carry out good decorative work, it may be of interest to recall that they carried out the whole of the work at the Ladies' Carlton Club at Chesterfield Gardens. Mr. Godfrey Giles has read two very interesting papers before the Institute of British Decorators, one entitled "The Legitimate use of Imitation in Decoration" (which incidentally further deals with the heading of this article), and another entitled "Kitchens and Bathrooms." These papers are forwarded by the firm post free to anyone interested, as is also a booklet, "Creations of a Craftsman," dealing with the scope of their work.

D & G LATEST SYSTEM

AN IMMINENT DANGER

DURING the last few weeks a quaint and very attractive advertisement has been adjuring the many thousands of readers of the better class of domestic journals to "Paint more—Save more," in order to resist the nefarious and home-destroying activities of "Rot—the Burglar."

It is advice that is probably better than even its originators know. Though the danger of rot in woodwork is never absent it is at present increased tenfold. Rot, the Burglar, is a most unwelcome intruder in any building or any home, and the policy of adequate protection is the only way to keep him out. He is always threatening—always waiting his opportunity to slip in at some unforeseen and all unnoticed damp spot, or to enter by an unprotected point in the woodwork, and when his activities take the form of the secret spreading dry-rot, his entrance is not only dreaded but dangerous.

Just at the moment his opportunities in this direction are endlesss, especially in houses fitted with timber felled since the beginning of the War. Those who know—fearful pessimists—are predicting a veritable plague of this dry-rot—disastrous and impending, and their warnings should not be disregarded by the property-owning public in general. Those who have had experience of dry-rot in the woodwork of their houses know what a serious matter it can prove, and those as yet unbitten by experience should arm themselves with the knowledge that alone can protect.

Owing to the scarcity of timber during the War, and the urgency of such building operations as were carried on, builders and others were compelled to use enormous quantities of unseasoned bad quality wood. It is, of course, in such wood that dry-rot flourishes—in such timber that the spores of the fungus would in many cases be present before it was fixed, and as the same quality of timber is still being used, and must continue to be used from sheer necessity for some considerable time, it is easy to visualise the possibility of the plague that the pessimistic experts predict. The disease being infectious, too, the most seasoned house and the best of timber are also open to attack, and if the trouble really spreads the plight of property owners will be terrible.

Like most plagues and epidemics, it can, however, be prevented and cured if proper measures are adopted in time and the first few premonitory symptoms rigorously treated and ruthlessly stamped out. For this purpose ordinary paints are useless, though they have their undoubted value as surface protection. But when the seeds of the evil are latent in the timber, and the spore of actual infection is once allowed to get in, contrary to being a protection, paint may be an actual aggravating factor of the disease. By closing up the pores of the wood it prevents the ventilation which provides the only natural check to the growth of the fungus, and so accelerates the internal decay.

Several wood preservatives have been experimented with from time to time with a not always encouraging degree of success, but Solignum has been found to provide a complete and effective remedy not only for dry-rot but for all other forms of rot and decay. Solignum is not a paint. It calls itself an antiseptic wood stain and preservative, and certainly, for both exterior and interior purposes, it lives up to every syllable of its title. Wood properly treated with Solignum will not dry-rot, nor will it decay in the ordinary old age or weather-beaten way. By the judicious use of Solignum timber can be made practically everlasting.

That is where its importance should be fully recognised just now. All this bad and unseasoned timber that the exigencies of the War foisted upon the building trade, and which provides an ideal breeding ground for the seeds of the fungoid plague which the experts now predict, requires protection. The seeds of the disease must be destroyed and rendered harmless. Whether this timber is already incorporated in properties that have been built or repaired during or since the War, or is still lying stacked in timber yards, protection is imperative. In buildings where dry-rot has already begun the Solignum treatment, combined with drastic surgery amongst the affected timber, is the only remedy.

Apart from these wonderful rot-combating qualities Solignum is a really beautiful stain for interior decoration. It brings out the full beauty of the homeliest as well as the most valuable of wood work, accentuating the natural grain, and has opened up a wide new range of original and artistic possibilities. The many colours provided by the makers furnish ample opportunity for the exercise of individual taste.

It has its own particular claims, too, to indispensability in the garden, estate and farm. Fences, gates and outbuildings, if treated with Solignum, seldom need repair, and wooden buildings occupied by animals are particularly grateful for such treatment. The disinfecting properties of the preservative keep the interiors clean and free from vermin, prevent horses crib-biting, and act as an antiseptic deterrent of contagious diseases amongst cattle. In the tropics it is invaluable for protecting furniture and woodwork against the ravages of the destructive white ants, and has proved the salvation of many a threatened bungalow. A case is on record where timber treated with Solignum has resisted the white ant for fourteen years, and is still sound.

Altogether, considering the present uncertain outlook as regards property, and the urgent all-round need to practise economy, the properties of Solignum warrant the attention of all wise householders and all owners of properties and estates.

Are you proud of your house

YOU can't be if the paint is looking shabby. Shabby paint is depressing. Smart paint is cheery—healthy for you and for the material it protects.

Even an old house keeps a youthful look if it's kept well painted. And old woodwork and ironwork remain sound if paint is applied regularly.

Timely painting protects your house—and your pocket. Once rot gets into woodwork and rust on to ironwork, there is a big repair bill close ahead. Expenditure in paint is sound economy.

How does your house look now? Wouldn't a fresh coat of paint do it good, make it a cheerier place to live in? Besides you would be easy in your mind about those parts where rot is so apt to establish itself once the paint gets worn.

Talk to your decorator to-day.

Mr. Paintmore and Mr. Savemore say: "A coat on the house is worth two in the mind."

The ATCO MOTOR MOWER

The most efficient Mower on Earth

The 1923 ATCO has won even warmer praise than last year's model, which outsold all others. Superiority in invention as well as in construction makes the ATCO the most truly scientific motor mower available. Don't be put off with a makeshift—have an ATCO, the only motor mower to which a turf cultivator can be attached.

The ATCO TURF CULTIVATOR (illustrated) will aerate the roots—destroy plantains, daisies, and other fleshy-leaved weeds—level turf—loosen and collect moss—make coarse grass fine. It is the only apparatus that ensures the proper upkeep of lawns, and can be affixed only to the ATCO Motor Mower.

A Few Appreciations

"The Lawn Mower which you supplied me with two years ago has just completed its second season's work without a single breakdown, and without me having to spend a penny on it."
Robert Noblett, Esq.

"I enclose two photographs taken on my lawn. The child, aged twelve, can mow the lawn quite easily. I consider the machine is excellent."
E. Liebert, Esq.

"The Atco is working perfectly. I work it myself, and find the work quite a pleasure. It is done in half the time of the old pony-mower, and the lawns have never looked as they do now."
Mrs. Dorothy Coppen.

"If I have mowing to do which otherwise would take a man and a boy with a push mower six days' hard work which I do with an 'Atco' in two days and on less than a Gallon of Petrol Mixture, it is the thing in every way."

Broadcasting in the Country Home

Broadcasting is a new interest in our national life which makes a particular appeal to country families by bringing to their own firesides the latest music, speech and song.

It is, however, most important that a discriminate selection of the "Listening-in" Set should be made.

If you will be guided by the experience of thousands of already satisfied users you will purchase a GECOPHONE Two-Valve Set which will positively ensure for you all that is best in Broadcasting.

Manufactured by the G.E.C (The General Electric Co., Ltd.), GECOPHONES are the outcome of accumulated knowledge and experience in many years' Telephone and Wireless development and, being devoid of all technical complications, can be installed and operated with the utmost ease.

"Splendid results" (from Motherwell).

"I may say that splendid results were obtained. The 2-Valve GECOPHONE "Set being connected to a single wire aerial of regulation length, London, "Birmingham, Manchester and Newcastle were audible, and speech and "music perfect."

"We distinctly heard Newark, U.S.A." (from Aberystwyth).

"Between the hours of 2 a.m. and 4 a.m. we distinctly heard Newark, U.S.A. "Wireless Concert, on a 2-Valve GECOPHONE. We believe this constitutes "a record, and is a great tribute to the efficiency of the GECOPHONE."

"We were, so to speak, actually at the opera" (from Derby).

"We were able to get the opera at Covent Garden Theatre with your 2-Valve "GECOPHONE. It was excellent, and all the instruments in the orchestra "could be plainly heard. Also the applause. We were, so to speak, actually "at the opera, and not striving to hear something a long distance away."

Buy Mileage

WHEN you buy Tyres you should buy mileage.

It is how long a tyre lasts in use that makes it cheap or dear.

We aimed at longer mileage when we made the Dunlop Cord. We satisfied ourselves beyond a shadow of doubt that we had achieved this before we offered one to the public.

Every Dunlop Cord is alike. They all pass the strictest tests ever given to any tyre that has ever been made.

Therefore, buy a Dunlop Cord, not as an article, but for distance to be covered in comfort and safety for a given amount of money.

Remember, it costs no more to buy Dunlop Cords and get the extra mileage. We are proud of the Dunlop Cord—prouder than we have ever been since we made the first tyre.

The Reason

THE uninitiated think of a Tyre in terms of Rubber. Cotton is a factor of almost greater consideration

It is friction between the layers of the cotton fabric that subjects a tyre to internal disintegration. If that friction is reduced, the tyre's life is prolonged.

The secret of the strength of Dunlop Cord tyre construction lies in the pure rubber insulation between each layer of the fabric, and the diagonal arrangement of the layers of straight cord. By this method there is less internal stress. The tyre keeps cool. There are no danger zones.

If you have been using the old-type canvas tyre, change over to Dunlop Cords, and you will do double mileage.

Make the change, and prove the truth of this.

MR. THURSBY-PELHAM'S COLLECTION OF ENGLISH FURNITURE.—II

THE restoration of the monarchy in 1600 with the return of the Stuarts witnessed a great change in the manners of the English people, which is plainly reflected in the furniture of the time. It seems as if, in their desire to cast off the depressing yoke which had lain heavy on them during the Commonwealth, they determined to abandon everything that might remind them of the past. It was the beginning of a new era. It is true that, in building, the revolution came earlier owing to the adoption of the Palladian principles of architecture by Inigo Jones in the reign of Charles I; but it was not till the time of Charles II that a revolution equally complete, though due to other causes, occurred in furniture.

If we compare any typical pieces of furniture of the time of Charles II (irrespective of country-made work, where the old traditions lingered) with those which had been made previously and which had developed by a natural process of evolution from Early Tudor times to the Commonwealth, we cannot find links of form, decoration or character which would prove, or even suggest, that one style had passed into the other following the normal progress of civilisation. On the contrary, we find reaction. For instance, is there connection of any kind between the heavy oak chair of Tudor and Early Stuart times and the elegant model of the time of Charles II with its cane seat and back, spiral rails and crisply carved framework? The types are not related. Differences of wood are immaterial. The causes of the reaction lie deeper; they lie rather in a different outlook on life and a choice of different models.

The old English traditions were cast aside and foreign types of furniture, mainly Dutch and French, were adopted, though imbued with a character of their own by the workmen of England. Civilisation, moreover, was becoming more complex and new types of furniture were required by the more refined habits of the day. Thus the increase in the number of books led to the demand for bookcases. China-cabinets were needed owing to the new fashion for collecting. Gambling produced card-tables. Tall candlesticks or candle-stands of column shape became fashionable. Mirrors, hitherto imported from Venice and regarded as objects of great rarity, came into general use, although, even throughout the eighteenth century, the most expensive items on a bill of furnishing. Chairs and settees upholstered with brilliant velvets and silks added both to the comfort and luxurious appearance of the more fashionable houses of the day. Such were the types of furniture which an extravagant Court and nobility demanded, and which the wealthier middle classes were not slow to copy.

Mr. Thursby-Pelham's collection is rich in furniture of the Restoration and subsequent reigns, and the present article will treat of those belonging to the period extending roughly from the reign of Charles II to Queen Anne. The change visible after the accession of Charles II, and already alluded to, is found not only in the types and forms of furniture, not only in their character and the purposes for which they were made, but also in the methods of decoration employed in their embellishment. Hitherto we had found solid furniture either carved or inlaid with natural woods in a simple manner. But from the time of Charles II new processes of decoration—parquetry, lacquer, gesso and gilding—are commonly met with, all methods of enrichment of foreign origin. Another important innovation was that of the glazing of doors of cabinets, rendered possible by the general use which was now being made of glass. A further development was the practice of using veneers, so that a common carcase might be disguised beneath a valuable wood of fine figure and texture. Much ingenuity was also displayed in the selection and arrangement of figured woods so that patterns could be obtained.

If we examine the illustrations of the two china-cabinets (Figs. 1 and 4) we are able to realise the change which had taken place in the character of furniture and to appreciate the fine qualities which the new style possessed. As types of furniture they are in no respect related or descended from cupboards of the Early Stuart period. Their origin is Dutch. Nothing but praise is due to them for their excellence of design and gracefulness of proportion. The elegance and variety of their mouldings and turned legs give to them all that is needed from the point of view of ornament. Moreover, they are admirably adapted for their purpose, and are in a sense modern in spirit, since they are perfectly suited to life at the present day. It is doubtful if later styles have advanced in intrinsic merit on much of the furniture of the Late Stuart and Queen Anne periods.

The chest of drawers (Fig. 3) is, again, a type of furniture owing its origin to the period of the Restoration and which has lasted without a break to modern times. Richly chased handles and escutcheons as a motive of decoration became fashionable from the time of Charles II. Marquetry, also, having much of the quality of painting with greater permanence, added much to the gaiety of the furniture of the time.

The chairs and stools here illustrated are notable examples of their period, distinguished for the fine quality of their workmanship and, in some cases, for the rich original silks and velvets with which they are covered. On the bright-coloured stuffs used at this time depended in no small degree the brilliant appearance of the more extravagant houses of the day. At Boughton in Northamptonshire, built by the princely Ralph, Duke of Montagu, at the time of William and Mary, the succession of State rooms remains to-day almost untouched, with the furniture still placed as it stood when the house was built. We can, therefore, form a just idea of the original grandeur of these lofty rooms, but it must be borne in mind that the gilding is tarnished and that the faded silks now so much admired for their subtlety of colour are like distant echoes of the brilliant reds, blues and greens of the latter years of the seventeenth century.

ELABORATELY CARVED ARMCHAIR.
(Late Seventeenth Century.)

CLOCK BY JEREMIAH JOHNSON, ON LATE STUART GESSO BRACKET.

The furniture of this period had, as a rule, no architectural character except in rare cases, like that of the bookcase of Pepys at Cambridge. At the time of Elizabeth and the early Stuarts the cupboards and chests of the time partook to some extent of the character of contemporary panelling. And in the eighteenth century William Kent and Robert Adam conceived of furniture as an essential part of a scheme of interior decoration. But from the period of Charles II to Queen Anne the architect and cabinetmaker do not seem to have worked together. The furniture of this period, with its many different methods of decoration, seems to suggest a number of individual units, more or less accidental, rather than elements in a general scheme of decoration.

THE INVENTORY OF ESSEX

Essex, North-East. Royal Commission on Historical Monuments, 1922.

THE Royal Commissioners on Historical Monuments are rapidly completing their thoroughly efficient Inventory of Essex. The north-west and central areas have already had their volumes, and to them is now added the north-east area. That contains the town of Colchester, a rich archæological field of which the inventory takes up over fifty pages. Here, "on the N.E. side of the old British oppidum the Romans enclosed an area of about 108 acres by a wall 3,100yds. in length." Much of this wall remains, and within it ninety-two "structural remains" have been located, portions of tessellated pavement being frequent. The eleventh century castle is a noted example of Norman military building, while the ecclesiastical architecture of that period is well represented by the ruins of St. Botolph. Of the thirteenth century is the fine ironwork of the south door of St. Peter's Church, and the fifteenth century gives us the beautiful and well preserved gate-house of St. John's Abbey. Fully as interesting as these are a series of houses, mostly timber framed, in the streets. Much of the richly ornamented late fifteenth century oakwork of the façade of the Red Lion Hotel has recently been found well preserved under a lath and plaster covering. No. 3, West Stockwell Street, and "Siege House," at the corner of East Street, are of the same period and show their timber structure. They are striking features of the picturesque street views still presented by this town, so architecturally rich both in itself and in its neighbourhood. Six miles south-west of it Lord Marney's noble but unfinished scheme for a palatial house rears its lofty gate tower, which, with its accompanying buildings, including the church, shows us how brick could be used and how Italian elements could be grafted on to our late Gothic manner in the days of Henry VIII. Ten miles south-east lies St. Osyth's Abbey. There flint and ashlar are the materials for the grand domestic work of the last abbots, but brick appears in the additions and rearrangements of the first lay owner, Lord Darcy. Among more modest homes dating from Tudor and Stuart times we find illustrated and described in this volume such sympathetic examples as the Valley House at Langham, Josselyns in Little Horkesley, Southfields at Dedham, and Markshall, two miles north of Great Coggeshall. In a main street of that litle town we are brought up sharp with an exclamation of pleased surprise by the façade of Thomas Paycock's dwelling, that proves to us how effectively a local merchant of old could employ local craftsmen. Master carpenter never did better work than he whom Paycock set to work for him in the reign of Henry VII, and Coggeshall is a village to which all who are interested in the past of building craft should certainly make a pilgrimage. The joiner, too, became prominent under the Tudors when wainscoting came into general vogue, and Tolleshunt D'Arcy Hall offers a very fine example of panels of linenfold, interspersed with some showing more elaborate carving, as of the roundel enclosing a sculptured head. The plaster-worker only gradually developed his craft under the Tudors, his full development belonging to the reigns of the early Stuarts. Of their time is a ceiling at Boxhouse Farm, Dedham, and contemporaneous with this interior work is the pargetting which we find at Wivenhoe and Earl's Colne, while a ceiling at the "Three Cups" at Harwich is of the simpler type of plasterwork that was practised under Elizabeth. Of the various points of interest in the churches of the district, the porches stand out as worthy of study, for they are very various in both style and material. Of wood we have the fourteenth century examples at Aldham, Tendring and Bradwell. Of stone and flint the fifteenth century gave us admirable specimens at Great Bromley, Ardleigh and Fingringhoe, while brick was effectively used at Feering and Pebmarsh soon after the advent of the Tudors. To many, even of those who have a general knowledge of our architectural history, the wealth of material and the local and characteristic forms it took in Essex as set forth in these volumes will have come as a revelation. In others it will awaken an interest in this invaluable section of our national heritage. But there are counties even richer, especially those where, as in Northamptonshire and Somerset, building stone, easily workable and ready to hand, gave scope for architecture of a fine and enduring character. While we express full gratitude to the Historical Monuments Commissioners for their admirable work in timber and brick-using Essex, we cannot hide our impatience for an equally full and satisfying treatment of some of the richest stone-using areas.

EQUIPAGES DE TOILETTE

PANDORA'S Box is credibly related to have been no larger than a casket, for not only is the idea of all our troubles confined in a travelling trunk or a crate inartistic, but it is untrue to reality. The sources of misfortune are always small, and doubtless the bags in which Ulysses received the Winds were little larger than those paper ones in which we carry off twopenn'orth of acid drops. Any cynic will tell you in how small a compass, when the lady of your heart is at length tucked up and asleep, lie those charms which set you in a fever overnight. Beauty, we know, at its best is but skin deep; usually it rattles in a remote corner of a reticule.

It is a matter for astonishment with what exiguous materials and in how confined a space the elaborate rites of Georgian toilette were celebrated. To-day, when a lady's dressing-table is co-extensive with her bed, we examine the tiny tables of that age, their ingenious folding and disappearing attachments, with, as we said, astonishment. The custom of holding levées and conversations de toilette explains this economy of space. When the area between bed and wall, into which payers of their respects to ladies were accustomed to insert themselves, was so narrow as to be termed a ruelle or alley, it is no longer surprising, seeing that the bed occupied the greater part of the room, that the dressing-table and wash-hand stand were small and the bath non-existent. But the same publicity of the bedchamber which demanded economy of space equally demanded extravagance of equipage, though a desire for delicate fashioning in those intimate articles with which the human race are wont to make themselves fit to be seen is probably instinctive. The most exquisite pains were applied centuries ago to such utilitarian objects: Tutankhamen's mannequin is a masterpiece, and the little glass bottles in which the perfume of Rhodes was secreted in the Greek era are most delicately executed. The eighteenth century expended equal care and much greater sums on toilet sets and work-boxes.

> Behold this equipage, by Mathers wrought,
> With fifty guineas (a great pen'worth) bought.
> See, on the toothpick Mars and Cupid strive
> And both the struggling figures seem alive.
> Upon the bottom shines the Queen's bright face;
> A myrtle foliage round the thimble case.
> Jove, Jove himself upon the scissors shines;
> The metal and the workmanship divine.

Though this was written in Queen Anne's reign, it applies very nearly to the tray of toilet requisites in the wonderful travelling case made for Pauline Buonaparte and formerly at Hamilton Palace. This case, containing a complete silver-gilt service for every meal as well as everything for the toilet, is of French workmanship, as exquisite for the beauty of its design as for the compactness with which it stows away.

It is probable that most toilet equipages originally had cases into which they could be packed for travelling; but these have not survived, although many sets of the articles themselves are still extant. A toilet set in the Victoria and Albert Museum, containing eleven pieces and made by Abraham Butreaux in 1728–29, gives evidence of having had a case at one time, in the shape of leather jackets fashioned to fit some of the pieces. Two oblong boxes and a pair of whisks preserve these leather cases.

Of the same year is the toilet set made by Isaac Liger for the Earl of Warrington and sold at Christie's in 1921. This contains seventeen pieces, embossed in a manner rich even for that time. In a pair of scent canisters, though their chamfered corners, down which run husk drops, suggest the fashion which Kent was to familiarise, the panels of the sides display, in the amorini and vases adorning them, something of the beauty of the full Italian Renaissance. Seeing these panels by themselves, apart from the shape of the canisters, we could almost believe them to have been made in the time of Cellini. The profusely embossed tops to the boxes, however, though of fine workmanship, do not attain to the decorative beauty of the canister panels, and are the work of a craftsman rather than of an artist. Much more beautiful work was being produced in England forty years earlier.

There is a tazza, no doubt used to put rings and trinkets in, displayed at South Kensington, the workmanship in which is quite admirable. Sir Charles Jackson truly says of this piece that at no period in the history of English plate, if we may judge by what has survived to our own time, has the human figure been represented in hammered silver with more exquisite grace than is displayed in the modelling of the figures upon this tazza. . . . No two of the figures (Jupiter, Diana, Saturn, and a winged goddess—perhaps Minerva) are in the same attitude, and although three are reclining, the limbs are all differently disposed. "W. F.," who made the piece, must be taken as a master.

Another set at the Museum of the same year, 1683, has a gorgeous mirror joyously embossed on its frame and pediment with swirling acanthus and amorini, while the centre of the pediment is occupied by a circular plaque containing two female deities before a portico. This happened to be a year when magnificent toilet sets were the vogue. Another set in the same Museum is part of the Swaythling heirlooms and illustrates, probably better than any other piece of plate, the Chinese taste which for a few years at that date rivalled the florid classicism exemplified in the two sets already mentioned. In this latter set the design is perfectly plain, enabling the flat surfaces so obtained to be delicately chased with chinoiserie figures and symbols. A set a little earlier, the property of Messrs. Wilson, is in the same taste, and at one time probably contained the same number of pieces (seventeen) as the Warrington set. One of the whisks, however, has disappeared, reducing it to sixteen. Most of the pieces in this set are octagonal, except a pair of low vases with covers, also describable as circular flattened boxes on a low foot, with scroll handles. The mirror, too, is of the usual shape and is curious in appearing to have had a pediment affixed to it that was too broad, since it overlaps the frame for some distance on either side. A set belonging to Lord Ilchester, of 1690, and made by Daniel Garnier, one of the Huguenot silversmiths, illustrates the full Louis XIV style again. This was shortly to be considerably modified by the imposition of the "Britannia Standard," necessitating thicker metal and less delicacy of ornament. The Duke of Portland has a noble set by Pierre Platel (1701), in which the French grace is combined with the solidity associated with the reign of Queen Anne.

PAULINE BUONAPARTE'S TRAVELLING CASE (FORMERLY AT HAMILTON PALACE).

These magnificent sets must have been available to none but the very rich; yet in their manner through all time the less rich aped their surpassers. No doubt the lady described by Prior, of whom we read:

> She without fail was waked at ten,
> Drank chocolate, then slept again;
> At twelve she rose; with much ado
> Her clothes were huddled on by two;—

—no doubt she occupied the hours from twelve till two largely with such silver utensils as we have been describing. Fifty years later the Connoisseur of 1755 (quoted by Mr. Macquoid in "The History of English Furniture") describes a visit to "a very pretty fellow. I was desired by his valet de chambre," says the writer, "to walk into his dressing room . . . the toilette most excited my admiration; where I found everything was intended to be agreable to the Chinese taste. A looking glass enclosed in a whimsical frame of Chinese paling stood upon a Japan table over which was spread a cover lid of the finest chintz." This is à propos Chippendale's chinoiserie, while a cover-lid is shown in one of Ince's designs for "A lady's Toiletta," and is often to be seen in old-fashioned bedrooms of to-day. But Sir Robert Walpole's dressing-table was diminutive—a little gilt affair with a glass top scarcely 18 by 24in. in area. Dressing-tables of earlier date are scarcely distinguishable from other small tables. During the last decade of the seventeenth century, however, some individual traits appear, such as a knee hole, and probably many objects described as writing-tables are really dressing-tables. The most common folding tables are of the late Chippendale period; furnished with the plain equipage of that date, the mirror contrived so as to disappear when the flaps are folded inwards. C. H.

COMING SALES

PICTURES, DRAWINGS AND BOOKS.

DURING the eighteenth century, English gentlemen imbued with a love of the fine arts undertook the grand tour and, being connoisseurs of means, greatly added to the artistic wealth of their country by the purchase of masterpieces. One of these, Sir Abraham Hume, Bart. (1749–1838), was a collector of the first rank, and between the years 1786 and 1800 went many times to Italy, especially to Venice and Bologna, to purchase pictures. He supplemented these by purchases in Flanders and this country. The important collection thus formed passed to Viscount Alford, son of the first Earl Brownlow, and his Countess, Lady Marion Alford, a distinguished authority on decorative needlework, further added to it. Many of the pictures were hung in Ashridge, Berkhamsted, and, by order of the executors of the late Earl Brownlow, are to pass under the hammer at Messrs. Christie's on May 4th and 7th. To these have been added pictures by old masters from No. 8, Carlton House Terrace, the property of Lord Brownlow.

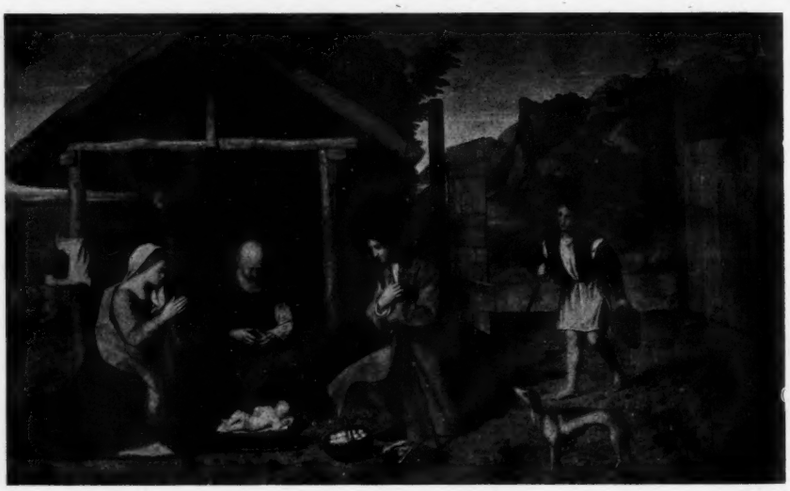
About two-thirds of this great collection consists of Italian pictures. First, there is the superb "Adoration of the Shepherds," traditionally attributed to Giovanni Bellini (1426–1516), but now considered to be by Vincenzo Catena, through resemblance to works by the latter in the National Gallery. The Holy Family is placed on the left, the Holy Infant lies in a wicker cradle, with the kneeling Virgin in blue and red; St. Joseph, wearing a brown cloak, is seated with clasped hands in prayer; a shepherd in a brown habit, kneeling on one knee, is offering two doves and a basket of eggs; behind him is a youth in white shirt and blue slashed coat. A hound in the foreground, the ox on his knees, a distant angel in the sky to the left, a mountainous landscape seen through the open door—these are some of the simple component parts, through which is spread the intense devotional feeling of the whole. The picture was formerly in the Giustiniani Palace, Venice. By Gentile Bellini is a portrait of a man in rich yellow doublet and black hat, traditionally reputed to be the famous Condottiere, Bartolomeo Coleoni, of the great equestrian statue by Verrocchio in Venice.

One of the most perfect pictures, described by Dr. Waagen as the most beautiful little picture of domestic devotion by Cima da Conegliano, is "The Holy Family with saints and angels." The colour is especially fine, rich red and blue, lined with yellow, and white are the Madonna's robes, St. Joseph is in yellow, there are angels in white and lavender, St. Lucy in red, and St. John the Baptist in green. The Madonna is seated under a tree, in the distance is the ass, with buildings below the hills. It is familiar through exhibition and illustration.

Very famous, too, is the narrow upright panel of St. Catherine of Siena holding a crucifix and a flowering lily in her right hand and a book in her left, by Lo Spagna (Giovanni de Pietro). Of great interest are the scenes from the Lives of St. Augustin and St. Jerome, a pair of panels by Benvenuto de Giovanni, and the portrait of a Venetian admiral, said to be Vetor Pisani, by Paolo Veronese and the Titians, Tintorettos and other works by famous Italians.

The Early Dutch and Flemish schools are represented by brilliant examples. Of portraits there is that of Mary Tudor, Duchess of Suffolk, daughter of Henry VII and widow of Louis XII of France, by Mabuse. It is a work of great power, the dress is rendered in black and white, with brown furs and relieved by the sparkle of rich jewels, the background being green. The face, of somewhat heavy outline, is beautified by the pleasing expression of the dark glowing eyes and the full ripe lips. The hands, too, are full of character. Another portrait, of a different period and order, is the well known Burgomaster of Ghent, Anton Triest, brother of the Bishop of Ghent, by Sir A. Van Dyck. This portrait, too, is mostly in black and white, with a background of Corinthian pillars, landscape and a red curtain.

Of figure subjects, there are "The Flight into Egypt by Night," "The Annunciation," "The Discovery of Achilles," an important sketch for the picture in the Hofmuseum, Vienna, "The Meeting of Ferdinand, King of Hungary, and the Cardinal-Infant at Nordlingen" in 1634, and other works by Rubens. A charming small picture of a lady holding a mandoline is signed by P. Van Slingelandt and dated 1677. By D. Teniers is the interior of a large gallery hung with pictures by Italian artists, with a figure of the Archduke Leopold, to whom a man is showing a picture, while the artist waits with a sketch.



"THE ADORATION OF THE SHEPHERDS.' ATTRIBUTED TO GIOVANNI BELLINI, PROBABLY BY VINCENZO CATENA.

The landscapes include one of A. Cuyp's chief masterpieces, "The Maes at Dordrecht," the boats, town, figures and water bathed in the hues of sunset, and light clouds in the sky. There are several important landscapes by Jacob Van Ruisdael, two being "Landscape with groups of houses" and "A Harvest Landscape." In the latter the figures are by Adriaen Van de Velde. By W. Van de Velde are several seascapes, the most important is the splendid "Engagement between the English and Dutch fleets"—the English being in retreat.

Drawings by old masters, comprising various properties, will be disposed of by Messrs. Sotheby on March 22nd. From the collection of Major H. G. Morritt of Rokeby, Castle Barnard, comes a series of Italian drawings, of which between twenty and thirty were formerly in the Sir Joshua Reynolds collection and are ascribed to Domenichino, Carlo Maratta, Primatticcio, Annibale Caracci, Pordenone, Tintoretto, Giulio Romano and others.

One of the most interesting subjects is Albrecht Dürer's view of Nuremberg, with various inscriptions giving the names of the chief buildings; and there is a very curious drawing in pen and bistre by Rembrandt, showing Potiphar's wife accusing Joseph, which was executed about 1635–40. Notable, too, are the portrait of Cornelius Van der Geest, by Sir Anthony Van Dyck, executed in black chalk; the view of a plain with roads, waterways and a distant city by the sea, with

The feeling is spreading that Germany will come to terms over the Ruhr and that the Turks have shown a preference for a peaceful settlement, both reasons making for better markets.

The amount of business is steadily increasing owing to the confidence of the ordinary investor being restored by better results, since Company reports for 1922 coming to hand make a good showing on the whole. If there is a reduction of Income Tax and Corporation Profits Tax, then an outburst of sustained activity in the share market is almost assured.

We hope that readers have found the suggestions in this column useful, but owing to the interval between writing the notes and the date of publication, opportunities, open to our correspondents, are not as good as they might have been owing to prices moving meanwhile.

The low rate of the exchange has caused PORTUGUESE THREES to stand at a very low price (31). The dividend on the 1st series, payable in London in sterling through Messrs. Baring Bros. has been paid regularly. Portugal has a big trade with this country and there is apparently no reason why the dividends should not be met. Consequently, we regard the present time as a rare opportunity to purchase a foreign Government security to yield nearly 10 per cent.

SOUTHERN RAILWAY DEFERRED are creeping up but we see no reason to sell under a minimum of 45. CANADIAN PACIFICS are not overvalued and this year may see a wider market in them again.

BOLIVAR RAILWAY.—This Company operates in the district in which South American Copper Syndicate's properties are situated and with the mine in full swing and better coffee crops, the increasing traffics make interesting reading. The dividend record for both preference has been quite satisfactory when allowance is made for the present prices, and we regard the 6 per cent. Preference as very attractive about 7/-.

TEA.—The commodity market has hardened again, and the price of common tea is slowly mounting. The Share Market is short of stock, and higher prices will have to be paid for shares for the next three months. Southern Indias at 50/-; General Ceylons 36/-. Rangallas 7¼d. p.m. and, amongst the smaller priced shares, Northumberlands, Poonmudi, Pindenioya should all show substantial capital appreciation. IMPERIAL TEA COMPANY, with a capital of £487,960 and £75,300 6 per cent. Debentures can make a good return on 4½ million pounds of Tea from its 13,253 acres under cultivation, and should pay a record dividend more than justifying the present price of 31/3-32/3.

RUBBER.—The market in the commodity has been uncertain of late, causing many purchasers of Rubber shares to realise profits on prices prevailing in October last. The output of rubber for 1923 is estimated at 300,000 tons, and the consumption at 400,000 tons, so that the big stocks, at last decreasing, should disappear and the output of the estates exceed the 60 per cent. permitted by the Stevenson scheme. Investors should keep a sharp look out against being misled into purchasing shares of companies which had splendid dividend records before distributing their reserves by way of bonus shares in 1919 and 1920, or thinking of the old dividend records on the standard output. If they will do this, and give standing limits for their purchases to be made as cheap shares come on offer, then the present dull period is an excellent opportunity to obtain Rubber shares. Permas (17/6) Beau Sejour (1/6), Singapore United (1/4½-1/6), and Higgoda can be purchased safely, as also the Tea-cum-Rubber Company Shares, Kintyres and Stagbrooks.

ANGLO-SCOTTISH TRUST.—This is a comparatively new finance company with a well selected board and has been for over 12 months under a fresh, sound, energetic régime. The Company had a hand in the flotation of Agwi Petroleum and other successful issues; it is reported to have done very well on its railway investments. In consequence we have no doubt that the whole of the deficit shewn in the last balance sheet has been recovered, together with sufficient to pay a dividend; the financial year will end on 30th June. The shares of such companies rarely come on the market, consequently our readers would do well to take an interest here for capital appreciation and dividends as the activity in the shares of late will prove justified when the report comes to hand.

OIL.—As anticipated in this column, interest is steadily widening in Oil shares. The most promising feature is the future of Venezuela, and cables from that country show the enormous activity and magnificent results being obtained. The only low-priced share of companies interested in Venezuela is OMNIUM, and now that markings in the shares have been permitted we have no reason to hesitate in emphasising the possibilities of this Company three church spires, figures and horses, in water colour, by Philip de Koninck; the water fête in celebration of the marriage of Louis XVI—an architectural composition with a pageant watched by a multitude on the quays and bridge, by Moreau Le Jeune; the Claudes, one a study of a great tree and other foliage, a ruined bridge in the Campagna on the left and a shepherd attending his sheep—the other, a curious classical building in the course of erection on the shore of a lake with mountains beyond; the drawings by Vernet; and the pen and wash sketch by Rodin, "L'horrible transformation: l'homme et le serpent lapid." There are a few drawings in crayons by J. Downman, including portraits of Jeremiah Milles, Dean of Exeter (1714–84) and his wife, and a good many designs by Early Flemish and Italian artists.

For three days, March 26th to 28th, Messrs. Sotheby will sell books, autograph letters, illuminated and other manuscripts from various sources. The first day is devoted to the publications of the Doves Press, the property of the late Mr. Cobden-Sanderson, from No. 1 of the preliminary publications, 1900, to the Catalogue Raisonné of 1916; books from the Kelmscott Press, belonging to the late Mr. Howard H. Thomson; a series of very interesting autograph letters from Charlotte Brontë to Amelia Ringrose, afterwards Mrs. Joe Taylor, sister-in-law of Mary Taylor, the Rose Yorke of Shirley; and autograph letters and manuscripts of artists and musicians. A collection of books in rich old bindings, the property of the Earl of Haddington, begins the second day's sale; some of these have very interesting contemporary Scottish bindings and armorials; finely bound and important works from various sources, early plays and illuminated manuscripts. Here we have a second folio of "Mr. William Shakespeare's Comedies, Histories and Tragedies," 1632, that will excite some competition for possession, and a highly important series of autograph letters and historical documents, the property of Captain R. Wrottesley, followed by a number from various properties, emanating from Henry VIII, Marguerite of Austria, the Emperor Charles V, Charles I, Cromwell and Charles II, statesmen, generals such as Lafayette (by whom there is a number of very important letters), literary men and musicians. Especially interesting are the Thackeray and Carlyle letters and a document in the handwriting of Matthew Sweetser, schoolmaster, of Dulwich College, and bearing the signature of Edward Alleyn, actor and contemporary of Shakespeare, who founded the College in 1613–16. In another manuscript, the account book of the churchwardens, etc., for the parish of Eltham, Kent, there are set down fines for misdemeanours, including "Cricket players on ye Lords Day," 1625–55.

On the third day will appear the Bowes family papers from Streatlam Castle, Durham, the property of the Earl of Strathmore, which are of the highest historical importance, especially in regard to the relations between England and Scotland and the government of the northern counties. With the illuminated manuscripts are two beautiful Italian antiphonaries written and illuminated by Matheus de Ripariis for the Benedictine monastery of St. Grata at Bergamo in 1509, one with about forty large initials containing miniatures in gold and colours. The binding is the original monks', brown leather stretched over wood, with several stamps in blind There are pierced metal bosses at the corners and centre and metal studs round the edges, with a long leather strap with metal clasp and studs.

On this day will come up a first folio of Shakespeare, the property of Mr. F. F. Urquhart; a copy of Robert Burns' poems, Kilmarnock edition, 1786; the portrait of Robert Burns by Alexander Nasmyth, copied by Nasmyth from his own original from life about 1820; the very rare "The Charity Bazaar," by R. L. Stevenson, privately printed (1868); a collection of the works illustrated by Hugh Thomson; a series of original drawings by "Phiz," and a volume of early drawings by Thackeray.

"PORTRAIT OF MARY TUDOR, DUCHESS OF SUFFOLK." BY MABUSE.

The last object in the sale is the most sensational—one of the very rare "Harmonies" of Little Gidding, made for Charles II when Prince of Wales, with upwards of 1,200 engravings cut out and laid down and bound in purple velvet with pattern stamped in gold. Owing to the Civil War it never passed into the possession of Charles II, though he saw and admired it.

On March 19th and 20th Messrs. Puttick and Simpson will dispose of the furniture at No. 68, Ennismore Gardens, S.W., the property of the late Marquess of Breadalbane, It includes an old Scottish oak court cupboard, carved with an M, crown and national emblems on the doors, said to have belonged to Mary, Queen of Scots, and a very fine carved draw table, both from Taymouth Castle, and other English and Scottish specimens, porcelain, textiles, Aubusson and Oriental carpets.

In their sale of old pictures at Willis's Rooms on the 8th inst., Messrs. Robinson, Fisher and Harding obtained good prices for, among others, a view of the old Horse Guards' Parade from St. James's Park, with the Banqueting Hall, Whitehall, by T. Wyck, about 1660, £115 10s. (Leger); and a Flemish triptych showing the Virgin and Child, with portraits of the donors on the wings, £231 (Russell).

CHELTENHAM AND NATIONAL HUNT RACING

"LINCOLNSHIRE" AND "NATIONAL."

I THINK it was in 1860 that the first National Hunt Steeplechase was run, and, of course, appropriately enough at Market Harborough. In the long interval it has journeyed here and there, going in recent times to Warwick, until finally it made its headquarters at Cheltenham, which, under the excellent organisation of Messrs. Pratt and Co., was re-created and in every respect made a fitting G.H.Q. for National Hunt racing. I am reminded of all this by the fact of having attended and survived (in spite of poisonous weather) the latest celebration at Cheltenham. Among great enthusiasts who have grown old in the winter time sport of steeplechasing and hurdling I noticed at Cheltenham the Earl of Coventry. He may be said to be the father of such sport.

I wondered whether he had attended that first steeplechase in 1860, but certain it is that he has had much to do with hunting and steeplechasing in that very fine sporting country of which Cheltenham is the centre. Some famous names in racing are also associated with Cheltenham, and in that connection I believe I am correct in saying that Fred Archer had family associations with it. The new Cheltenham is a most elaborate affair, with a handsome range of stands such as you would suppose would only be associated with the best flat race meetings in the country. The "member" is the main consideration of the executive. Of that there is no doubt, and, after all, he and his wife and their sons and daughters, so to say, must be the backbone of the meeting.

What a pity it was, therefore, that the weather should have been so frightful, for it cloaked what otherwise would have been quite a brilliant affair in a social sense. Rain, either falling or threatening, and much mud underfoot throughout three days do not help one to turn thoughts to a display of anything except umbrellas and mackintoshes. The amphitheatre-like course, with its slopes and rises, forms a most admirable test, while the diversion into the country, so as to include the four miles of the National Hunt Steeplechase test over an excellent hunting line, must be accepted as ideal. And so it would be were the soil of a lighter nature. That must ever be the disadvantage of this G.H.Q.

Well, now, as to the big steeplechase of last week, let it be said that the sporting character of it was rudely disturbed in its closing phase by what happened a very little way from the winning post. The hot favourite Templescoby—imagine the bravery of those who freely backed this horse at 7 to 4 in a four-mile steeplechase, the main condition of which is that no starter shall have won a race of any description !—was a beaten horse three or four lengths from the winning post. There was no doubt about that. Duke's Walk held him, although both horses were tired. Suddenly Major Doyle took up his whip; though there was no real reason why he should have done so. He must have been over-anxious. But he had not even applied it when his horse swerved away from it and partially rolled in front of the pursuing horse. Mr. Harry Brown on Templescoby made it look bad by snatching up his horse as if fearful of being brought down.

We all knew what was to follow, and sure enough he objected on the ground of boring and crossing. It amounted to this, that although the better horse won, he had committed a technical offence against the rules of racing. So the hard and rigorous rule which governs these things when a disqualification takes place consigned him not into second place, but to bottom place, beneath even those that had fallen at a very early stage in the long and tiring journey. It is a tyrannous rule and horribly unfair in all its workings.

Templescoby is an Irish-bred horse and, like Duke's Walk, was prepared for the race by the Hednesford trainer, Tom Coulthwaite, who is a really wonderful man with jumpers. It was he who trained the winner a year ago, Conjuror II, and that horse is now to take his chance in the Grand National next week. I am not sure that Templescoby and Duke's Walk are very much better than high-class hunters. But, judging on looks and the way they performed, I should say they are pretty useful sorts that will do well in ordinary open steeplechasing just as Conjuror II has done. Everyone was glad to see Major Doyle win the Foxhunters' Challenge Cup on Fairy Hill, also produced for the occasion by Coulthwaite. Lovers of a good hunter and a gallant horseman were glad to give them a cheer.

If the powerful Hednesford stable had scored heavily in the closed events, which, after all, are the feature of the gathering, it met with a big check when their Grand National candidate, Fly Mask, an even money chance for an important three and a half mile steeplechase handicap, was beaten into third place. It may be that he could not act in the deep ground, but there was much disappointment when he could not do better than fill third place behind Mr. Curtis's horse Alcazar. I shall have another opportunity of referring to Fly Mask before the Grand National is due to be run. For the present let me say that his trainer has by no means lost faith in him because of this defeat. He is such a great jumper, he argues, and has it not been said by some cynic that the Grand National is no more than a jumping contest on a prolonged scale ?

I could dwell longer on other features of Cheltenham's feast of steeplechasing, but I must turn now to the Lincolnshire Handicap, which is due to be run on Wednesday next and is, of course, the outstanding event of the first week of the new season's flat racing. I am writing of flat racing only. As a matter of fact, what interests me far more in this particular week is the Grand National Steeplechase. Most people interested in the Lincolnshire Handicap have by now heard something of the four year old gelding Tons of Money, weighted at only 6st. 11lb. and reputed to have been tried at Foxhill a racing certainty. Many of those who have heard have also fallen under the spell this horse has created, and have assisted in bringing him to the remarkably short price at which he stands as I write these notes. Can it be that another Tishy has been unearthed ? Either he is going to win the race if only half is true that has been claimed for him, or he is going to take rank as an impostor. We may be sure this is not the opinion of his enthusiastic trainer, Mr. Tom Walls, the actor, who has amused so many in the farce after which the horse takes his name—merely by coincidence, of course, and not for publicity purposes ! His supporters are desperately keen on him and will not hear of his defeat. They also backed him at long odds against, really long odds and none of your 25's and 33's ! They have thus had fine opportunities of hedging and of standing to win a lot to nothing. That is called in betting language "standing on velvet." I have told you all I know about him, and if I can give him no personal recommendation it is because I have never seen the horse and must in any case accept the claims cum grano salis until they have been established by the judge at Lincoln when he comes to put the numbers in the frame.

A far more serious candidate to my mind is Roman Bachelor, who represents the best class of handicapping in the country. Formerly he was trained by Mr. Gilpin at Newmarket, who not long ago gave all his Sunday readers a free tip (or rather it cost the price of the newspaper only) for Port Royal. I always thought that Roman Bachelor should have done better than he did, but it is certain that when not overtrained he was a very fine performer. For some time past he has been with Major Gooch, a clever man with horses, who, I am sure, deals out individual treatment to all in his stable instead of applying a rule of thumb to the lot. Roman Bachelor has, I know, done well under his supervision and methods, and though it is undoubtedly against the horse that he should have top weight, I cannot see one that I prefer to him.

Soldennis has had many friends, but that fact does not make him have any advantage in the weights. I cannot see that he is anything like the pick of the handicap, and I assume that his friends are banking on the horse being better now than at any other period of his career. Monarch will have a following, but I am suspicious of a horse that has had so many hard races as have been his portion, especially, of course, last year. Horses have long memories, and they do not get better after such experience. Very often they deteriorate. Granely, the winner of last year, and Clochnaben and Tregenwell in the same ownership, may retire after the way which Tons of Money treated them in the Foxhill trials. After all, why trouble to start such forlorn hopes as presumably they must be in the circumstances ? I confess to a liking for Royal Alarm. He is very genuine, and especially would I esteem his chance were Carslake to do anything near the weight on him. Argo won a hurdle race the other day, and naturally one would fancy the well handicapped Port Royal, except that as I write there is no sign that he is fancied by his owner, who, as a general rule, is a very big better when he fancies anything quite seriously.

Aclare can be left out of the reckoning this time, but Varzy is said to have pleased in his training, and he is a Royal Hunt Cup winner. No suggestion has been forthcoming that Psychology is thought anything of on this occasion, and Blackland, though a winner over the course, may not be good enough at the weights. Vivaldi is ungenerous, and I would prefer an honest mare like Miss Majority. Dry Toast is not above suspicion, and I cannot say a good word for Westmead or Drake's Drum, while Precious never did get anything like a mile on the flat. There has been some talk of Werwolf, but on principle I am not charmed with the very low-weighted ones in this handicap or, indeed, in any big handicap in these times. I like nothing better than Roman Bachelor, if he has ordinary luck in the draw and has no bad luck in running, he will be very hard to beat.

I may have another opportunity of touching on the Grand National, but I can say now that I like none better than Gerald L., Arravale and Forewarned. If all three should fall, then I would turn to one of the plodders like Taffytus and Sergeant Murphy. It was a really fine show that Gerald L. made at Hurst Park last week-end and very much impressed the writer, for they went a good gallop throughout and he carried top weight of 12st. 7lb. He must have hit himself close home, as he faltered near the winning post and was nearly caught by Chin Chin. As a matter of fact, he came back to the paddock very lame, but it wore off as if by magic, turning his trainer's agony into a wonderful relief. I feel sure one of the three will win. It is just a question as to which will survive. PHILIPPOS.

THE RIVIERA AS A MOTORING CENTRE

HOW many of the visitors to the French Riviera really know the territory that exercises such a powerful appeal to them, and probably brings them from foggy England to brilliant sunshine year after year? The question is suggested by a recent tour round the Côte d'Azur, by the realisation that previous visits have left me entirely ignorant of the true character of this wonderful country, and by the discovery that most of the wonderful "beauty spots" that we found were entirely unknown to the majority of British visitors we met in the Palace Hotels and usual haunts of pleasure seekers in the Sunny South. Beauty spots is a hackneyed and belittling term to apply to the gems of that true Riviera which is not the coast-line between San Rafael and Mentone, but lies on the knees of the Alps which, like gods, look down in everlasting pity and scorn on the artificial prettiness of Monte Carlo, the noisy revelry of Nice, and the more aristocratic and perhaps more healthy athletic life of Cannes. It is only the motorist with a car at his full disposal, who can realise how inaccurate and unfortunate is the prevalent English idea of the attractions of the Côte d'Azur. Elegant hotels one can get at home, with equal facilities for loosening one's purse strings for the benefit of shameless menials; legalised gambling is a pleasure more restricted in the opportunities for its enjoyment; pigeon shooting, and similar "sports," are, I believe—and hope—a monopoly of the place, and they are monopolies that none wishes to seize. But there are other monopolies, other charms less known yet far truer and far greater than any placed there and fostered by man alone.

Even the Corniche d'Or is not known universally to all habitués of the Côte d'Azur, though it is an important through road—from San Rafael to Cannes. Even in this land where beauties abound, and where all and every kind of natural scenery may be had for the asking and the expenditure of a little energy, the Corniche d'Or is notable. In the first place, it is the only bit of road along the Mediterranean sea-board for the whole length of what is technically known as the French Riviera that is without tram-lines. (And only the foreign motorist who has taken a car many times along the coast road between Cannes and Mentone knows all that can be meant by trams and tram-lines. Even the Manchester man has something to learn!) This lack of tram-lines is too great an asset to be omitted from a list of those of the Corniche d'Or, One need not go all the way to the South of France to find a road without the anachronism of trams, but one must go all the way there to sample the beauties, as distinct from the practical assets, of this Corniche. It is unique among Riviera roads in being truly rural while running along at the edge of the sea, and it is unique in the variety of the scenery it offers.

In the thirty-eight kilometres from San Rafael to Cannes, one skirts tree-clad cliffs dipping down to the blues and greens that only the Mediterranean can offer; one has huge vertical masses of bright red rock towering above the road in one place, and dipping down, bare, to the sea in another; sometimes there are entrancing little sandy beaches, though not so many of these as one would find on a corresponding English sea-board, if there were such a thing. Here and there a glimpse is to be had of the distant Alps, sometimes across the sea, sometimes through gaps in the mountain cliffs inland. And if the day for the trip be properly chosen, the colourings of everything, from the sea to the trees, and from the mountains to the little beaches, are colourings that would surely turn the head of a colour-artist, or cause a poor chameleon to burst with his haste in keeping up with the everlasting changes. Here, indeed, Bergson might have said, "Nothing is constant but change." The trees are mostly cork and eucalyptus, though there are many conifers; the rocks appear to be mica-laden sandstone, the mica accounting for some of the extraordinary reflecting colour effects that are sometimes seen; the sea—well, the sea is the Mediterranean, and the road is French. It twists and it winds, it jumps up and leaps down in a way to shame any self-respecting Alpine pass; its gradients are often severe, but, of course, never very long—they never worried our Wolseley Fourteen in the slightest, and, speaking from memory, I think we managed most of them on "top"—but I think this road may in its way be characterised as the most exacting in a land where exacting roads are the regular thing. Its demands are made on the driver rather than on the car, of which no part is unduly stressed, unless it be the brakes, which need to be thoroughly reliable and well adjusted. But the corners, coming as they do so unexpectedly, and the chars-à-bancs with their French drivers coming still more unexpectedly, or the sleepy horses with their still sleepier cochers, all give the driver of the private car, especially if he be at all pressed for time, quite an exhausting little run for his money. But I have never yet heard anyone pause to wonder if it has been worth it.

There is another road from San Rafael—or rather Frejus—which is almost the same, to Cannes, and this over the Esterel Mountains—the hills that stand up from the sea and carry the Corniche d'Or on their toes, as it were. The Esterel Road is essentially a hill country road, always densely wooded, and always extremely pretty. I would not venture a comparison between this and the Corniche d'Or, for the two are so different, though so close and running practically parallel, but there is no venture required for the assertion that neither road should be missed. The round trip from San Rafael to Cannes, out one way and back the other, is only about forty-five miles, but it would be a shame to do it in less than three hours, and impossible in less than two.

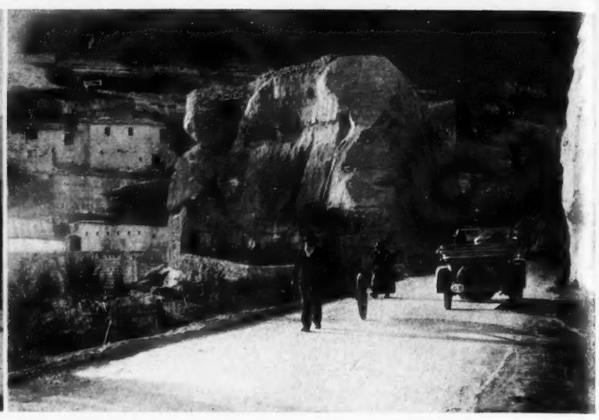
LOOKING OVER THE DISTANT ALPS FROM THE GRAND CORNICHE.



ROCK DWELLINGS ON THE ROAD TO THE GORGES DU LOUP—THIS HUGE LUMP OF ROCK IS TUNNELLED AND INHABITED.

The motorist going down to Cannes or beyond from Avignon, and then returning, should take the Esterel Road one way and the Corniche the other. Whichever he takes first he will want to take again, but he must resist the temptation and do as he is told.

CHAOTIC TRAFFIC.

From Cannes to Mentone what is there to be seen and recorded? Many little towns, mostly quite unpleasant; the most unruly traffic in the world, at least it ought to be; and the worst conceivable tramway system. The lines go from one side of the road to the other in delightfully haphazard fashion. You never know whether the tram that is approaching should be passed on the same or the opposite side as the one you have just scraped past by the skin of your teeth—and fortune favours those who rush in where angels fear to tread; and you never know how many horse drawn vehicles with drivers fast asleep, and how many chars-à-bancs, you will meet as you squeeze past a tram a little towards that side of the road on which you did not expect it to be, on a blind corner. But you may be sure you will meet some; and you will know before you have gone far along this nightmare of traffic that you alone of the frequenters of these roads have any idea of what is meant by the rule of the road and its observance. Whether this picture is exaggerated or not may be judged from almost any copy of the local papers, in which fatal accidents are treated as a mere matter of course and as inevitable weekly—sometimes almost daily—occurrences. If it were all not so absurd, it would be highly amusing; for the traffic is neither fast nor dense—at least it is not dense in quantity. All the trouble is due to the way the tram-lines are laid and to the utter incompetence of the authorities, who seem to have not the slightest idea of what constitute the rudimentary elements of traffic control. The natives seem to become possessed of suicidal mania as soon as they see a motor car approach, and in Monte Carlo, whenever one of them is successful, the road is closed to one way traffic for three or four days. Afterwards the game may be resumed! This really serious matter, which is the only serious snag I can think of to motoring in these parts—and is indeed bad enough to keep away altogether the driver with any suspicion of nerves—could be so easily removed, if only the authorities could wake up to the realisation that it is rather past a joke. A little restraint on the drivers of the chars-à-bancs, and some forcible lessons that would induce them to keep to their correct sides of the road; similar or even more drastic treatment of the sleepy drivers of horse-drawn vehicles—sleepy is not an exaggeration, but mere accuracy—added to a gentle safety first campaign among the native population and their children could work wonders.

SOSPEL.

EXCELLENT GARAGES.

And now I have finished with the only warning that is necessary for the Englishman who would like to go by car to the Riviera, so that he may really see it, but has hitherto been chary of doing so. A little practice in traffic work, preferably in Glasgow, Birmingham or some other large provincial town, where the ruling ideas of traffic control are somewhat crude—London is utterly useless for the purpose—and he will be all right. The journey across France is nothing, provided the car springs are really sound—nothing that is in the way of trouble. In the way of interest and pleasure, it is superb, especially if the Auvergnes-Cevennes route that I described a fortnight ago be chosen. The garage service available everywhere is excellent, and infinitely cheaper and more courteously rendered than in England. On the Riviera itself charges are slightly higher than in other parts of France, but the difference is not worth considering. As an example of what can be had, I may cite our experience at Rouen, which we entered with one tyre flat, the spare being already punctured—the two went simultaneously in fact. We asked at a

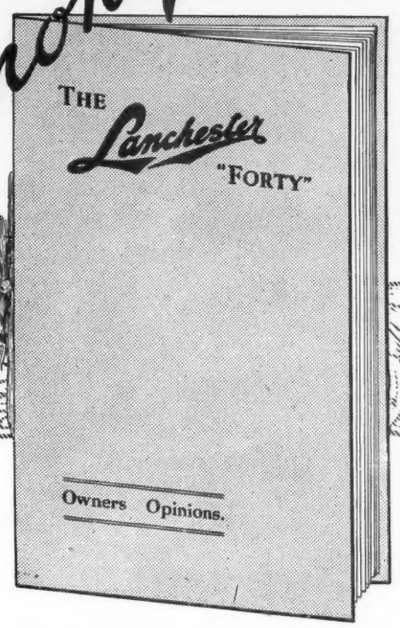
Convincing Testimony



Letters worth Reading

WE have collected a number of Owners' opinions of the Lanchester 40 H.P. Car and published them in booklet form; they are letters worth reading and constitute convincing testimony to the excellence of the Car. There is a copy of this booklet for you—will you write for it?

26-10-22.

Having now had my 40 H.P. Lanchester 18 months and done over 18,000 miles, I should like to say that I am delighted with her in every way.

I do not think there is a car on the road that gives such pleasure to drive as the Lanchester; the gear changing is child's play and the acceleration wonderful.

Yours truly,

(Signed) ——

garage if they could repair the tyre, we were invited inside, and before I was properly out of my seat, the wheel was jacked up, and the tyre well on the way to being completely off the rim. Much to my regret I did not time the operation but I should guess that we were in that garage not more than six minutes all told, and in that time the tyre had been repaired for a charge of two francs, everything included! In an English garage my lowest record for the same job is half a hour, and the lowest charge 2s. 6d.—and the two did not go together. The tyre size was 815mm. by 105mm. Petrol costs more on the Riviera than in Northern France, and the highest price of all has to be paid in the Principality of Monaco: the most we ever paid was 8fr. 75c. a bidon, and the lowest 7fr. 25c.—a bidon holds five litres and four and a half litres equal a gallon, the franc at the time of writing is worth about three pence, although most of those we bought cost us fourpence. Thus one may say that, approximately, the cost of petrol in France is only a trifle higher than in England, even allowing for the fact that the contents of two bidons will go into an English two-gallon can, which presumably they ought not. Lubricating oil and other accessories are, taking into consideration the rate of exchange, slightly cheaper than they are in England, but storage charges are, except in the hotels, higher—seven francs a day is a fair average figure all over France, so we found.

Having neither the desire nor the necessary knowledge and space to compile a guide-book, I can do no more than outline two or three of the runs that the motorist on the Riviera must make. Each one of them is surely the most wonderful run in the world, until the next one has been made, and has driven the first—well, not out of memory, for that is surely impossible, but into second place; and so one's first run, that leaves one gasping by the wondrous beauty of it all, becomes, instead of an ideal, a sort of standard by which the others are judged.

Simply on account of its central geographical position, let us take Nice as our base of operations—and, indeed, a very good base it makes, for both inland and coastwise places are all readily accessible from it. The town itself is notable for two things—the chaos of its traffic, even in a territory where chaos is the regular order of the day, and the one or two stretches of fine roads in or just beyond its precincts. The roads of the Riviera as a whole are not bad, but they are not so good that one fails to appreciate the Promenade des Anglais or the stretch from Cagnes (not Cannes) to Antibes. These were the only two stretches during the whole of our trip that gave us an opportunity of ascertaining the speed capacity of the Wolseley Fourteen, which proved to be 51 m.p.h. as an absolute maximum, with 48 m.p.h. as a readily attainable figure—not bad for a 15.6 h.p. car of more or less conventional design, with a side-by-side valve engine and a roomy touring body heavily laden and fully equipped.

NOT AN ALPINE PASS BUT THE ROAD FROM MENTONE TO SOSPEL, SEEN FROM THE VILLAGE OF CASTILLON.

THE CORNICHE ROADS.

There are three roads from Nice to Monte Carlo—the coast road with the tramlines and the traffic, the Moyen and the Grand Corniches. Of the three the coast road has economy in distance alone to commend it; the Grand Corniche, with its glimpses of snow-clad Alps on one side and the sea on the other, is easily the finest; but the Moyen Corniche, with its more intimate glimpses of the coast-line; with the cliffs, sometimes tree-clad and sometimes bare, towering above it and dropping apparently sheer down to the sea below; with its tunnels and its bridges; and, finally, the village of Ese, is quite one of those roads that must not be missed. And Ese is the most wonderful village in the world, be the next what it may. Its streets are half made steps, half hewn from the virgin rock, and the whole is delicately balanced on the top of a pinnacle of rock. Obviously one cannot go through it by car, but must enter through its walls on foot and toil upward to its castle ruins, to enjoy one of the finest vistas that the Côte d'Azur in the narrower sense can offer. On a clear day the rocky mass of Corsica can be seen across the sea, though La Turbie or Mont Agel is the "stock" platform from which to view "La Corse."

La Turbie is an old-world village on the Grand Corniche, and it is here that one turns off to the wonderful road up to the more wonderful golf course of Mont Agel—I speak not as a golfer but as one able to appreciate artistry in engineering, and the construction of a golf course on a rock more than 2,000ft. immediately above the sea is surely an engineering achievement. It is from Mont Agel that one sees the Casino of Monte Carlo at its best—i.e., from a safe distance and at one's feet.

LOOKING DOWN ON ESE FROM THE GRAND CORNICHE.

SOSPEL.

Those who think that climbing corkscrew roads and genuine hairpin corners are monopolies of the big Alpine passes should make the round trip from Nice to Sospel and back via Mentone. Here one has the climb over the Mont Cenis Pass and the drop down to Sousa in miniature, including Sousa itself. At Escarene the real scenery begins, and from here to the top of the Col de Braus it is comparable to anything magnificent to be seen anywhere on the Côte d'Azur. The drop down to Sospel will not easily be forgotten, and Sospel itself never. It is a village apparently dating from genuine Saracen times, as do so many of these old places in this part of the world, and it has been untouched by the march of time and the tramp of the tourist. It looks as though it would have to be touched by someone and fairly soon, or it will fall to pieces; but, having lasted so many hundreds of years, perhaps it will survive for a few more—nevertheless, little time should be wasted in going to see it. I said that Sospel had been untouched by time, and the fact that it can be reached by tram from Mentone demands no recantation, for a tram is not time. Roughly following the tram route the road ascends to the village of Castillon, another Saracen relic, but largely destroyed by an earthquake and never since properly rebuilt, and then descends through more magnificent scenery to Mentone; and about half-way down the natural grandeur is enlivened by a fine piece of engineering, the Pont du Caramel,

First in Value and Efficiency!

THE 19·6 h.p. Crossley holds the goodwill of the motoring public, probably more than any other car on the market, and every day it makes new friends. At £795 for the complete Touring Car it has no competitor. It is recognised everywhere as one of the finest four cylinder cars in the world. From five miles per hour on top gear it can be rapidly accelerated to sixty. Everything about the car speaks of quality, and its road performance satisfies the most exacting.

. . . .

The great reception given to the 12/14 h.p. Crossley is more than justified. It fits exactly a definite motoring need. It is safe to say that there is no other popular priced car on the market with a specification or performance which can approach it. This model will take any ordinary hill on top, will easily attain a speed of over 50 miles per hour. The engine is extremely flexible and responsive, the clutch smooth and silky, the whole car delightfully easy to handle and control.

Another model of exceptional interest is the 20/70 h.p. Crossley Sports recently described by the "Motor" as "one of the best cars ever produced in England." This car is sold with a guaranteed speed of 75 miles per hour on Brooklands Track.

There is also the famous 25/30 h.p. R.F.C. Crossley, which is giving splendid service in every part of the world.

exclusively for the tramway, the road running alongside. The distance of the round trip is about seventy miles.

THE GORGES DU LOUP.

But the climax of our Riviera motoring was easily provided by the Gorges du Loup—a sort of narrowed but magnified and very much glorified Cheddar. There may be finer sights in the Swiss Alps, but I have never seen them in the Alps that I know—chiefly the Dolomites. The special asset of the Gorges du Loup is that it is not too huge to be comprehended, and one seems to feel the awfulness of it all more intimately and more vividly than is generally possible with nature on the true grand and great scale. Here the very wise precaution is taken of limiting the traffic to one direction only. Actually the precaution is not fully maintained, because only mechanically propelled vehicles are limited in their direction, and so, whereas the driver of a car is sure he will not meet another car, he has to be on his guard against the usual characteristically sleepy drivers of horse-drawn vehicles.

The Gorges du Loup lies absolutely due north of Antibes, and it makes an excellent day's run from Nice through Cagnes, Vence, and then back through Grasse and Cannes. It is unwise to attempt to do this run in less than a full day, say between 10 a.m. and 5 p.m., because one ought not to have to hurry. The round trip is less than seventy miles, and so could be done in, say, four hours, but it would be most regrettable and unfortunate for one to set out with the intention of completing it in this time. On account of the restrictions as to direction in the Gorges du Loup, it is better to turn to the right at Cagnes, soon after leaving Nice, passing the old village of Cagnes, which one does not see properly from the main coast road, and then the equally fascinating walled town of St. Paul. The road lies through Vence and Tourrettes-sur-Loup, and then, a few miles before entering the Gorges proper, passes some remarkable old rock dwellings. Here there are inhabited houses hewn out of solid rock, some of the rock being the base of the mountains bordering the road, and in one instance, at least, a huge boulder standing isolated on the opposite side of the road is honeycombed and inhabited. The whole of this run would, were it not for what follows, be a climax; but in the Gorges itself the average man will be inclined to forget all that he has seen on the way up to it. Narrow and precipitous as regards its sides, but not as regards the gradient of the road, the Gorges terminates in a most picturesquely situated bridge and a huge tunnel through the rock, beyond which is the inevitable hotel on the side of the Saut du Loup—a saut that is disappointing compared to what one has seen and not up to the standard of many of our deer leaps. Just beyond, one turns to the left and, climbing the mountain pass, returns southwards through Guerdon.

It is this road from Guerdon that constitutes the crisis. It runs along a most magnificent and stupendous ravine. One enters on to the ravine by a right-angled bend at which, if one failed to steer the car, the vehicle would leap over into a chasm several thousand feet deep, or, if it were provided with wings, could fly right across and land on the road on the other side, saving perhaps a couple of miles in the process; but this couple of miles few travellers will want to save, for the road alongside this chasm is easily the most magnificent in its vistas that I have ever seen. I am not going to fall into the snare of attempting a description of it. Suffice it to say that its scenery consists of the wildest possible rocky gorges and mountains, with the Mediterranean in the far distance. Most regrettably, we had succumbed so readily to the temptations of the Gorge that, when we began this awe-inspiring descent, dusk was falling and so made photography impossible, although it brought us compensations because the twinkling lights of some of the coastal towns and the lighthouses at various points gave a fascinating and moving relief to the sombre nature of the immediate vicinity. At Grasse, the place where the perfumes come from, the most magnificent part of the road has been left behind, and the continual but gradual descent down to Cannes is quite ordinary going.

I would like to entreat, with all the emphasis in my power, everybody who possibly can to make this trip in their own cars. Public service vehicles, on which seats may be booked, are apt to stop at the wrong places and thus deprive one of the opportunity of drinking in all this magnificence; and I would like to add the final entreaty that one does not stop too long over the pleasures of lunch, or the wonders of the Gorges itself. The Gorges must not be missed, nor hurried, but it is the ascent from the Gorges and the descent through Guerdon to Grasse that is the culminating point.

I am confident that no motorist who braves the roads of Central France with his car will regret having done so when he sees for the first time some of this wonderful true Riviera territory. It is so utterly different from what is usually understood by the Riviera, and it compares very favourably with the Alps at their best, although, of course, it is essentially different in character. There need be no anxiety as to the capability of any really good car for tackling these journeys. Our Wolseley never once called for bottom gear on a hill, and, although the hill-climbing capacity of this 14 h.p. car is somewhat exceptional, the gradients are never sufficiently severe to disconcert a modern car at all seriously. And so long as the driver has a sure hand at the wheel, and so long as the brakes are reliable, there is no need for hesitation or qualms in tackling these indisputably exacting, although, normally, well surfaced, roads. W. HAROLD JOHNSON.

THE 11·9 H.P. STAR CAR

JUST which is actually the oldest firm in the British motor industry will always be a somewhat conversial point, if only because of the element of uncertainty provided by the varying early history of most firms. For instance, if a firm is called into existence as a manufacturing organisation, and then afterwards changes into a selling organisation, with or without a change of name, and then, perhaps, changes its functions back to those of manufacturing, whence shall the origin of the firm be dated; from its original formation, or from its creation with the name by which it is known to-day? But without being side-tracked into a futile discussion, we can say quite safely that one of the very oldest, if not the oldest in its present form, of firms in the British automobile industry, is the Star Engineering Company, Limited, of Wolverhampton. Naturally, with such a long experience behind the firm, the cars emanating from its factory may be expected to embody certain characteristics that will not be found in cars less matured in their development. Added to this, that the 11.9 h.p. Star is among the most expensive cars of its nominal horse-power rating on the market, there is quite an element of special interest attached to this model, and it was with these characteristics well to the fore in our minds that we recently took over the 11.9 h.p. Special Model Star for the purpose of usual testing.

In specification and design, the chassis may safely be described as conventional, although thoroughly modern. The engine is a four-cylinder monobloc, the dimensions being 69mm. by 130mm., and the total capacity 1,945c.c.—an exceptionally big capacity for an engine of this bore—due, of course, to the unusually long stroke, which is 10mm. longer on the latest model than it was on that of last year. The cylinders are bolted on to the aluminium crank case, the lower half of which constitutes simply an oil sump, and they have a detachable head which is provided with valve caps. As an example of cleanness, simplicity and modernity of design, this 11.9 h.p. Star power unit is excellent. Every component is easy of access, and there is none of that crowding of excrescences that one finds too often with moderate-sized engines of to-day.

On the off side and close up to the cylinder block is bolted the horizontal Zenith carburettor, fed by gravity from a tank in the scuttle dash, and there is a little detail connected with this tank that is deserving of widespread imitation. Instead of a protruding spout for filling, the tank is provided with a bulge, roughly

MOTOR "BP" SPIRIT

The Sign that means the "Best Possible."

Three Years of Work—Three Millions of Money

This is what it cost to build the great new refinery of the Anglo-Persian Oil Co., Ltd., at Llandarcy, Wales, where "BP" Motor Spirit is made.

No expense has been spared, no resource of chemical and industrial science has been neglected to make this refinery the most efficient in existence. It represents the newest and highest development of refining practice.

With the best possible crude oil—the product of the famous Persian field—and the best possible refinery, the refined product is bound to be also the best possible. And the "Best Possible" is "BP."

If it were possible to make a better motor spirit, Llandarcy would make it.

"BP" is the only entirely British petrol—British in every stage from the Crude Oil Well to the familiar Khaki Can.

semi-cylindrical in shape, and extending right to the bottom of the tank itself, so that one can see at a glance how much fuel there is at any given moment; although, we understand, that even this asset will be superfluous in the near future, as there is to be fitted a fuel level-gauge in the filler cap. On the same side of the engine is the chain-driven dynamo, an excellent feature in itself, and incorporating a simple means of adjustment for the drive. On the opposite side is the oil filler—one of the most accessible we have seen—and the magneto, which, while not exceptional from the point of view of easy access, is, nevertheless quite conveniently placed. On the dashboard under the bonnet are carried an oil can and a box spanner for the removal of the sparking plugs; although owners of these cars should remember that if they change one of the plugs, replacing it with another of different make, the box spanner may not fit the replacement. The other tools are carried in the tonneau, in a compartment which constitutes a foot rest for the passengers in the rear seat.

Engine, clutch and gear-box form a single unit, the clutch being of the single dry plate type, and the last-named giving three speeds and reverse, with central control—extenuation for this disposition of the control lever being afforded by the provision of four doors to the body, i.e., there is a door for the driver. Rearwards, transmission is by an open propeller shaft to a spiral bevel driven rear axle. Both hand and foot brakes are fitted on the rear wheels, the hand brake being internal expanding, and the foot brake external contracting. Ready means of adjustment are provided for both, and the linings can be examined and, if necessary, renewed without previous removal of the hubs. Suspension is by long semi-elliptic springs in front and rear; in the latter case being underslung on the axle. The wheels are detachable steel discs for 30in. by 3½in. tyres on the Standard model, but on the Special model—the one which forms the subject of this note—they are spoked wheels for 765mm. by 105mm. tyres. On the Special model also Gabriel Snubbers are fitted all round, but otherwise the chassis is identical with the Standard. Steering is of the worm and worm-wheel type, with adjustment for wear. The wheel-base is 9ft. 4ins., and the track 4ft.

BODY-WORK.

The body-work of the car is of a decidedly high order as compared with most cars of approximately similar R.A.C.

horse-power rating and price, which is £465 for the Standard four-seater, the Special costing £35 more. The differences as regards body-work equipment are an envelope for the hood and a rear wind screen, although sockets for this latter are provided on the standard model so that if the owner decides to have a wind screen fitted after taking delivery of the car, he has no risk of disfigurement or injury to his upholstery. Also, if preferred, a tool compartment can be had in the form of a metal box at the rear of the chassis, instead of as a foot rest in the interior of the car. Otherwise little comment is called for by the body-work, unless it be that the driving position provided by it is more or less of the upright variety, a position that seems to be returning to favour; although, for ourselves, we must confess that we do not like it. The provision made for the carriage of the side curtains and of the M.E. rear wind screen when not in use is worthy of comment. The former are carried in a compartment behind the back of the rear seat; the rear windscreen is carried in two pieces, one under the front seat, and one under the rear seat. The accommodation for the side curtains is found on many cars, but the Star is the only car that we know with this accommodation for the rear wind screen when it is not required for use; and a very sensible accommodation it is, for, while the screen can be left in position if required, it is, naturally, much better to be able to stow it away when there is no likelihood of there being a passenger in the rear seat to take advantage of it.

ON THE ROAD.

The dominating feature of the road performance of this Star model is undoubtedly the sweetness and remarkably good balance of the engine. We feel safe in going so far as to include this 11.9 h.p. Star engine among the two or three smoothest running engines of the size that we have sampled, and it scores considerably over some of its rivals in that its smoothness is consistent at all speeds. Whether running at its slowest of about 7 m.p.h. on top gear, or at its fastest, which was about 43 m.p.h., or anywhere in between, the running of the engine was quite comparable to that of several fairly expensive six-cylinders. A fully balanced crank-shaft with three bearings provides part of th explanation, but there is more in it than this; for it is no good spending much money in balancing crank-shafts, if the potential benefit is thrown away by carelessness in other details, which in the case of the Star it certainly is not.

In view of the smoothness and general attractive behaviour of the engine, we were a trifle disappointed with its power output. Admittedly the Star four-seater is a quite roomy and substantially constructed car, but its maximum speed proved to be very little over 40 m.p.h. under ordinary conditions, and its hill-climbing, although entirely satisfactory, could not be described as exceptional. Nevertheless, the hill-climbing prowess of the car has received a higher seal than that of our initial endorsement, for in last year's Scottish Six Days Trial a Star was the only car entered to obtain full marks on every single observed hill, a performance that was universally hailed and accepted as extraordinary. In this trial, it may be men tioned, this car was placed first in its class, the other Star car entered being second, and it will be remembered that the classification was a classification based on price, so that the Star may be accepted as the car giving the maximum service available for a car of its figure In connection with the maximum speed capacity of the car that we tried it ought to be made clear that the car was practically new and therefore not capable of giving of its best.

Another distinct asset of the car is the ease of its gear change. We took over the Star immediately after driving a car of which the gear-changing was decidedly unpleasant and difficult, and the contrast was a most refreshing and enjoyable one. The clutch, to which, of course, ease of gear-changing is primarily due, is thoroughly satisfactory in other respects, being light in operation and very smooth in picking up the load. The hand brake was good, and in fact, rather more than, that, for it was both powerful and smooth; but the foot brake had at first to be ignored, for all practical purposes, although some adjustment rendered it better, though not as good as it might have been.

Road holding as a function of steering and suspension was decidedly good, although the steering alone, which we were told is claimed as a very special feature of this car, did not impress us as being extraordinary. The fact of the matter is that the steering of all kinds and sizes of motor cars has improved enormously during the last couple of years, and the car that stands out notably in this respect nowadays, is very difficult to find. In order to avoid any misunderstanding let it be clearly stated that the Star steering is in no way unsatisfactory, nor does it give room for fault-finding. It is very good steering indeed, but it is not quite so good as to deserve the epithet of exceptionally so. On the other hand the springing is distinctly above the ordinary, for, without being unduly flexible and so too soft, it damps out all road shocks most efficiently and undoubtedly, to a large extent its smoothness and satisfaction may be traced to the presence of the Gabriel Snubbers, which give the car a smoothness over badly pot-holed roads that we have never yet discovered with cars not equipped with shock absorbers of any sort.

Star is undoubtedly a very attractive proposition. Its robustness of construction combined with the efficiency of its engine should render it a very economical vehicle in maintainence, although, unfortunately, the opportunity of accurately verifying its fuel consumption was not forthcoming but we are told this is in the neighbourhood of 32 m.p.g. when the car is intelligently handled over normal roads, and this is a very good fuel consumption indeed for a car of the size and type.

THE "HACK" CAR

THE WISDOM AND ECONOMY OF A LIGHT CAR AS A TENDER

THE practice is considerably increasing among owners of big cars of keeping at least one tender in the shape of a small light car for run-about work for which the comparatively expensive running of the bigger vehicle would be unjustified. It has taken a fairly long time for the economy of owning two cars to become realised, and to some extent this delay may be explained by the fact that it is only recently that really satisfactory tenders have become available. For years there have been on the market small cars with satisfactory engines and often surprisingly good performances, and this type has been much developed during the last twelve months or so. But this is not the kind of car that will satisfy the owner of a big and luxurious vehicle on the look-out for an economical tender to be used in the main for short distance work. Such a man does not want a very fast little car, though it must be capable of climbing all ordinary hills without difficulty. He does not want cramped and sporty body-work, for roominess is a prime necessity of a car that is to be used for carrying light goods and luggage, perhaps even more than passengers. Station work, shopping in the village, and perhaps making a call after dinner on a friend a mile or two away, give no scope for speed, though comfort is always appreciated and reliability is a sine qua non.

It is therefore refreshing to see that many manufacturers, some of them famous for the quality of the big cars they make, are now turning their attention to these light "hack" vehicles as distinct from the small car with an impressive performance. The first deliberate and conscious attempt to cater for this market was probably that of Messrs. Armstrong Siddeley Motors, Ltd. with their Stoneleigh car, and for the work for which it is intended, a more suitable vehicle would be difficult to conceive. In fact it has what I would venture to describe as the ideal specification for the work, and it may serve a useful purpose to review this specification in broad outline and see how far, and why, it deserves to be called ideal, within the limitation given.

The first essential of a utility car of this type is surely a roomy and accommodating body. It is perhaps the only type of car that ought to be bought for its body-work rather than for its chassis design. Now, to the ordinary tourist out for long distance work, the Stoneleigh body is not likely to appeal as the best possible. Its seating arrangements consist of a single seat for the driver, disposed in the centre of the floor, and behind is a seat on which two adults can be accommodated, ample room for their legs being available in the space at either side of the driver's seat. When no other passengers are to be carried the space available for goods or luggage is probably twice as much as could otherwise be given on a car of approximately the same over-all dimensions, and when the hood is up the whole of the contents of the car are under cover.

As regards chassis details the engine is of the simpliest kind that has yet been successfully applied to modern cars—the two cylinder "air-cooler." Giving ample power as compensation for its comparative noisiness, this kind of engine is extremely simple to maintain. It retains its tune for quite long periods without much attention, a respect in which it scores at present over its rival the miniature four, though this latter is rapidly improving, and it is not easily damaged by careless handling or abuse. Three speeds are ample for the gear box, and the absence of a differential may be regarded as a distinct asset for a car that may be called upon to tackle rough going in remote corners of the estate.

One of the most important requirements for the "tender" is that it shall be economical in first cost and in upkeep, two things that do not always go in company. It is now possible to buy one of several satisfactory little cars for well under £200; examples occurring readily to mind being the Stoneleigh (£185), the Rover Eight, (£180), and the G. N. (£195), all three cars that have been pioneers in their respective particular spheres, and all universally accepted as satisfactory propositions. The average fuel consumption of all three, taking a typical example of each for the individual figures, would be about 45 m.p.g., the oil consumption about 800 m.p.g., and the tyre life about 5000 miles under ordinary conditions of use. Both Rover and G. N. have what may be described as conventionally designed bodies.

Another type of body-work with considerable possibilities for the utility car is that known as the "occasional four"—pioneered by the Rhode car, and now adopted on many small cars with four-cylinder engines. Except in the case of the Trojan the "occasional four" body seems to find little favour among makers of two-cylinder engined cars. As its name

The "All-Weather" Body with its coach built collapsible roof and rigid draught-proof windows is an ideal car for the winter. It possesses many obvious advantages over the Open Touring Car which is designed, of course, for less strenuous weather conditions.

"The Car of many Comforts"

MEN who drive the Arrol-Johnston All-Weather justly praise its comfort—the adjustable driving seat, and the two doors which give quick and easy access.

They appreciate the care and thought that placed the gear and brake levers just where the hand naturally drops from the steering wheel, the neat grouping of the instrument board, the convenient parcel shelf, and the generous door pockets.

Their enthusiasm for this perfected All-Weather Body matches their admiration for the 15·9 h.p. Chassis that carries it, and is only equalled by their passengers' praise of its comfort, whether open or closed.

THE British built medium powered car is the staple type of British motoring, because it gives the best all round results. Straker Squires proved that thirteen years ago when they began concentrating on the 15-20 h.p. suggests, the body is a sort of compromise between the two-seater with dicky and the fully fledged four-seater; it consists of a conventional driving-seat—i.e., with room for a passenger at the side of the driver—and the compartment behind is generally devoid of full upholstery, and provided with a seat that can be inserted for passengers or removed for luggage as required.

The majority of these "occasional four" cars have four-cylinder engines, which undoubtedly give a smoothness of running that the two-cylinder will never quite equal; although some of these latter, chiefly by virtue of their apparent low speed, have a charm that many owners find preferable to the smoothness of the four. As examples of these small four-cylinder cars may be cited—in addition to the Rhode, which costs from £235—the Humber and Swift, (both at £275), and the Gwynne Eight, (the lowest priced of all at some £200).

Mention of the Trojan suggests that the unique engine and over-all design of this car may well mark the beginning of a new epoch for the pure "utility" car. A two-cylinder two-stroke engine has much in its favour, primarily simplicity and ease of maintenance, though the speed capacity of the car to which it is fitted, at least as exemplified by the Trojan, is strictly limited; but other Trojan features, such as the epicyclic two-speed gear, the highly efficient suspension and above all, the solid tyres are, theoretically at least, quite the ideal for a car with this raison d'être. Also the Trojan body is probably the largest and roomiest of all these "occasional fours."

If the total cost of buying and running a tender car for not less than a couple of years be tabulated, it will show a considerable saving over the cost of running the big car for the same distance over the same period—and the wisdom of the policy will become readily apparent, especially as it may be assumed that if used on the jobs to which the tender would be applied, the big car would be running far from fully laden.

THE CAPABILITIES OF THE SMALL ENGINE

IN spite of the valuable pioneering work accomplished during the last twelve months, there are undoubtedly many motorists sadly unaware of the capacity of the small four-cylinder engine, conventionally spoken of as the "miniature four." Of course, this engine has limitations, some of which are inherent, but most of which are limitations that have been, or are being, eliminated; and, just as the good that men do is more easily forgotten than the evil, so with car engines. The bad points of a particular type are eagerly seized upon and broadcasted through motoring circles; their good points are apt to be overlooked.

What are the particular merits of this particular engine as a type? If the engine can be made to haul satisfactorily an adequate load, then its chief asset is economy—for it is obvious that the smaller the engine, within limits, the less fuel it will use and the lower will be its general maintenance costs. Now, for the last two or three years it has been possible to obtain from miniature four engines quite extraordinary power outputs, but those outputs have been achieved at the expense of durability and reliability. In other words the game has not been worth the candle, and the miniature four as a class has suffered from the defects of some of its over-developed members. To-day, the natural evolutionary development in design—judicious improvements here, and better and sometimes more expensive material there—have gone a long way towards eliminating the notorious defects of the type, and the miniature four can be and often is as reliable as its bigger brother; and this increase in reliability, which at first was obtained at the expense of power output, is now being maintained parallel with maintained or even increasing brake horse-power per 100 c.c.

Thus it comes about that in the miniature four one has offered an engine of which the power output is often equal and sometimes superior to that of the conventional 10 h.p., 11 h.p. or even 12 h.p. light car engine, without any decrease in reliability and stamina. The natural and inevitable result is already becoming apparent. Vanquishing all prejudice, the miniature four engine is gradually establishing itself as the engine of the future among all motorists to whom running expenses are a real consideration.

At present one may say, somewhat paradoxically, that the improvements necessary for the further development of the type are improvements not of the engines themselves, but of the cars to which they are fitted. Quite recently we had on test a small car fitted with an engine of this type the road performance of which was extraordinary; but we hardly considered the car, as a whole, one likely to appeal to our readers, and, consequently, are omitting our usual description of it. We were forced to this decision with much regret, because the performance of the engine would have constituted almost impressive reading; but the car could not honestly be recommended to even the least discriminating of motorists. Its springing was inferior, its steering barely moderate, and its body-work might almost be described as a disgrace. If manufacturers and designers can be prevailed upon to

ROVER
"The Car that set the fashion to the World"

THE proved power and reliability of the ROVER "EIGHT," of which there are now over ten thousand in the hands of satisfied and enthusiastic owners, has resulted in the Four-Seater Model illustrated below. This is a marked advance upon the open type of car with dickey seat, as the extra accommodation is built into the car and may be enclosed with hood and side-curtains. The rear seat has ample room for two children or one adult. All 1923 models have better body work, improved finish, and many detail improvements, representing unequalled value.

Another ROVER owner writes:—"I have driven this car over 30,000 miles since June, 1920. The car is now entirely down and my engineer advises me that she is in practically perfect condition. In view of the mileage I think you will agree this an excellent testimony to the workmanship and materials which the Company uses in turning out their cars." Ref. No. 30.

realise that the engine does not make a car, although it may mar it, and if, acting on the realisation, they will offer to the public only vehicles of which the engine, transmission, suspension—the whole chassis construction, in a word—and the body-work form fitting counterparts, then their chances of success will be much improved. There are too many cars spoilt by really important failings in some single particular aspect.

But, reverting to the possibilities of the miniature four engine, the one we have particularly in mind had a bore and stroke of 63mm. by 100mm., giving an R.A.C. rating of 9 h.p. We have on various occasions made reference to the Mount at Guildford as a convenient test hill; but the fastest and the easiest ascent that we have ever made on this single-figure gradient was in the overladen car to which this little engine was fitted. The inferior and cramped body-work was intended only for two people; but with two adults and the addition of two children, to the mutual discomfort of all four, this little car went up the Mount on its second speed without once falling below 22 m.p.h. The speed capacity of the car on the level was no less extraordinary, 55 m.p.h. being readily attainable, and on one occasion, under favourable conditions, the speedometer needle definitely hung on to the 60 mark; and all this was accomplished on a fuel consumption of well over 35 m.p.g. Less ambitious driving—as, for instance, not exceeding 30 m.p.h. and taking hills at comparatively low speeds, could be relied upon to give a consumption of no less than 40 m.p.g., or even more.

"REVVING" AND ACCELERATION.

Of course, these little engines are not "sloggers." To get the best out of them gears must be changed frequently; but when a car can do, as this one could, close on 40 m.p.h. on second gear and nearly 20 m.p.h. on first, what is there to be urged in favour of hanging on to a high gear as long as possible? Excellently balanced and running with perfect smoothness, these little engines delight in "revving," and to get the best out of them frequent use of the gear lever is necessary. On second speed their acceleration can only be described as remarkable, and it is a fact that, on one occasion when driving this car, we managed to beat a Rolls-Royce limousine on acceleration. We ourselves were quite as surprised as the driver of this big car, justly world-famous for its accelerating powers, and it may have been that he did not use his gear lever to the very best advantage, relying too much on the extraordinary flexibility of his engine. Nevertheless, be the explanation what it may, the fact remains that this little "miniature four" car, costing only some £200, proved superior in an acceleration test.

The handiness and the ease of control of these small cars, on account of their small size, is another real asset, and to it may be ascribed a large proportion of their characteristic charm. The miniature four is a type of engine and a type of car that has come to stay, and the sooner it is realised that the general finish and standard of construction of the car should be on a par with the performance of the engine, the sooner will the future of its type materialise and the better it will be for those who are doing their best to popularise it.

MOTORING WORDS TO THE UNWARY

MUCH is written in these days about motors and motoring, cars great and small, how to manage them and how to circumvent the innumerable pitfalls which await the unwary; but there is one aspect of the whole question—and automobilism, like railway travelling and telephony, is a thing which has to be taken into one's life and accepted for better or for worse—which is seldom touched upon outside interested publications, such as makers' catalogues and advertisements; I refer to the simple but all important preliminary of purchase. As in Mrs. Beeton's classic work on cookery, you must "first catch your hare."

To the enthusiast on the threshold of ownership the makers' catalogues are alluring, the annual exhibitions in London, Paris and elsewhere are entrancing, and a little knowledge is a dangerous thing. Some take the sanguine view that the problems to be faced are not really difficult; their friends who own cars are quite ordinary mortals, perhaps not even exceptionally intelligent, and yet they manage their vehicles entirely by themselves; and the multitudes of taxi cab and 'bus drivers who appear to display, constantly, such astonishing skill and sang froid are also men like themselves, human and fallible. Others feel that there is so much to be learnt, both from a technical and economic point of view, that they can never rise to the occasion, and that unless their circumstances permit them to take refuge behind the experience of a professional chauffeur they can never achieve the joys of personal motoring and the proud position of the owner driver. In the notes which follow I hope to be able to offer a little assistance for both these points of view.

The novice should fight shy of second-hand bargains, for as it was in the days of horse coping, so it is now with many dealers in the more modern form of locomotion: defects are ingeniously concealed and the price paid for a second-hand machine is too often the price of disappointment and sorrow. Common-sense suggests that the novice contemplating the purchase of a second-hand car, should secure the services of an expert friend to "vet" the vehicle; but even so there are many factors which enter into such a situation, all of which are difficult to take into consideration. For instance, the price of a certain vehicle when new may be so and so, and the price asked for it second-hand may seem to be reasonable, but the seller may have inside knowledge to the effect that at the next Exhibition, say a few months hence, the makers are going to announce a big price reduction of their latest models with all the latest improvements. At the last Olympia Show in London this happened in several instances, with the result that recent purchasers of second-hand cars, and even of new models as well, found themselves with vehicles on their hands that were enormously depreciated in value, or, in other words, for which they had, in all good faith, paid a great deal too much.

This is perhaps the worst pitfall into which the purchaser can tumble; but, as regards the market for second-hand cars, it cuts both ways, for, so long as uncertainty prevails as to the prices of the best known makes of new cars in the immediate future, the second-hand market suffers and cars are difficult to sell and, consequently, easy to buy. Prices are now far more stable than they were immediately after the war, and the big exhibitions next autumn are not likely to see such sensational reductions as last year.

Assuming that a prospective purchaser has made up his or her mind to buy a new and not a second-hand car and has fixed the limit of price—this limit often proves most elastic in practice—the procedure, in the writer's opinion, should be systematic. A list should be obtained of all the makes which come within the price limit fixed, and then the question of power considered. This latter is extremely puzzling to the beginner, and even experienced people have not always got a clear grasp of the subject. Therefore, I hope that my readers will follow me through a little of the elementary technique of the subject.

When James Watt, the father of the modern steam engine, estimated the capacity for work throughout a normal day of the average horse, in order to establish a comparative standard for his machine, he found that the comparison was very derogatory to his engines, simply because a horse cannot work all the time, while a machine, theoretically at any rate, can. He, therefore, boldly added 50 per cent. to the capacity of his standard horse; but even so the comparison, which holds good at the present day, still seems to favour the horse. A few examples may suffice to make this matter clear: a 3½ h.p. motor cycle cannot haul a wagon load of six people up a long hill, whereas a good horse can; but on the other hand, the motor bicycle can take its rider and light luggage from London to Manchester in a day, a feat which no horse could accomplish. Teams of four or six horses drag heavy loads of stone or timber up steep hills, loads that would break the springs and overload the engine of a super car; but the powerful car sweeps up-hill with a lighter load at more than twenty times the speed, and thus, on calculation, is found to do proportionally more work than the team of horses. The stated horse power of a good car is not only just in comparison with the amount of mechanical work capable of being done by horses, but is often found to be below the actual power that the engine is capable of developing, for reasons which must be explained.

A maker's catalogue sometimes states the power of his car to be 10–12 h.p., or 16–20 h.p., or the difference, in the case of certain sporting models, is sometimes far wider, such as 25–90 h.p., and these indications are very puzzling to the uninitiated. There are mechanical methods of measuring horse power on the test bench which are applied by all good makers to every engine that leaves the factory, and sometimes it is stated that each engine is tested to develop a certain power—which is invariably, nowadays, about 50 per cent. above the rated horse power of the car in question.

Why is this? The answer is not altogether simple and is twofold. It is partly on account of the scale on which taxation of motor cars is at present fixed in England, and partly on account of the inherent characteristics of the internal combustion engines by which almost all motor cars are propelled.

Taxation has been responsible for much in the development of the modern motor car. In the early days various formulæ were devised for estimating in a rough and ready manner the power which an engine of given dimensions should produce, and the formula which was accepted then and is in use to-day is that of the Royal Automobile Club. It estimates the power of an engine on the bore, or diameter, of the cylinders and their number, assuming that piston speed will be approximately constant, or, in other, simpler words, that the longer the stroke the slower will the engine revolutions be, and vice versa.

Progress in design, material and workmanship, which has been very great since the early days in which this formula was first accepted, has largely falsified the calculations which are based upon it, and that is the reason why the actual horse power of a modern car is generally 50 per cent., and sometimes more, above the power indicated by the R.A.C. formula upon which its taxation is based, at present at the rate of £1 per horse power—a scale of taxation which is not only rather high for the purpose in question, but which falls with an incidence that is most unequal on different designs of engine.

This last point brings us to a consideration of the engine itself, which is, after all, the most important point in the economy of any car. Taxation on the bore or diameter of the cylinders alone has led to the development of a type of engine in which and you will certainly decide upon one of the models of the famous Albert Series. They are meant for hard work and they will stand hard work—but none the less, due attention has been paid to appearance and luxurious comfort. For refinement of detail they are unequalled.

Willys Knight

FIVE PASSENGER SEDAN £650

THE Willys Knight is the motor of tremendous mileage. There are no valves to grind, no springs to weaken, no cams to hammer and wear out; no loss of power, no loss of compression through valve trouble; but instead of all these poppet valve inconveniences, there is a quiet flow of power that actually increases with each rotation of the crank shaft.

THE Willys Knight motor improves with use, increases in power, and becomes more efficient as time goes on.

WRITE to us to-day, and investigate the Knight Sleeve valve principle. A demonstration places you under no obligation.

the bore is kept as small as possible and extra power is obtained by increasing the stroke or sweep of the pistons in the cylinders without reducing the rate of revolution. Thus the piston speed in modern engines has been raised far beyond anything that was contemplated when the original R.A.C. formula was laid down. The principal working parts have been reduced in weight as much as possible in order that vibration might not be excessive, and the friction of high speed working parts has been reduced by the use, wherever convenient or possible, of ball or roller bearings. Most modern engines are thus in actual fact something of rule-dodgers, and there are many technical people, among whom the writer may be numbered, who deplore a state of affairs which has produced artificially a type of machine that has been brought to a wonderful degree of perfection, but which may not be the best from an economical and technical point of view for the purposes for which it is intended.

In America different conditions have prevailed, with the result that American cars, far cheaper in their own country than are European vehicles anywhere on this side of the Atlantic, are taxed in England on a scale so heavy as to be out of all proportion to their actual value and performance. The best known of all American cars and one of the cheapest in the world, the Ford, is rated by the R.A.C. formula at over 20 h.p., an estimate which, on account of the now unusual dimensions of the engine, is actually very close to its real power. It is taxed accordingly higher than many British and continental cars of three or four times the price and of greater actual, though smaller estimated, horse power. Moreover, this principle of taxation is urged by its opponents to exercise a considerable and unfortunate influence on British designers, seriously restricting their opportunities of establishing and maintaining overseas markets. W.

The British Tyre Industry

THE British tyre industry at the present moment is in a very delicate condition, and it behoves all motorists to be acquainted with the facts of the case, for surely if those facts were fully realised, this regrettable ill-health would be very speedily cured. Foreign tyres are imported into Great Britain free of all tax or restriction, and indications are not wanting that they are at present being "dumped," i.e., sold at prices very little, if any, higher than their actual cost of production. During 1922, no less than five and a half millions sterling were spent by Britons on foreign tyres, and the result was that of the 65,000 workpeople normally and directly employed by the British tyre industry, one eighth were unemployed, and drawing the dole at the end of the year, while thousands more were on short time. Also more thousands in the textile industry directly dependent on the tyre industry were affected, for during last year no less than 5,000,000lbs. of manufactured cotton goods were imported as component parts of foreign tyres, i.e., fourteen times as much as came into the country in fabric gloves, the position as regards this latter having been met by the application of the Safeguarding of Industries Act. It will be remembered that when the application of the Act as regards fabric gloves was suggested, considerable opposition was raised by the Lancashire cotton industry, although it is that industry that is suffering so much from the importation of manufactured cotton goods. It seems a rather strange attitude for the hard-headed Lancastrian to adopt but in view of its bearing on the tyre situation it is quite interesting.

With its capital of £25,000,000, the British tyre industry is now turning out tyres that are second to none, and in many cases the prices of those tyres are less than in pre-war days. During the war, the British manufacturer's home market was handed over completely to the foreigner while he was engaged in supplying war demands. At the end of the war he found his home market waiting to be captured de novo, and himself in a practically hopeless position, so that the foreigner held it easily on account of the general dislocation of industry that followed the war, while foreign markets were definitely and irretrievably lost and rendered immune from further assault by the Britisher, on account of the tariff wall with which all are protected.

The position is one of considerable national importance, for, if the British tyre industry succumbs and we become entirely dependent on the foreigner, what would happen if for any reason those foreign supplies were cut off, as, for instance, in the event of another war? It would be unreasonable to expect the British motorist to buy British tyres if foreign tyres were much cheaper and much better, but as they are neither is not the policy that is being pursued rather mysterious, and a decidedly short-sighted one? Some sort of Government action seems to be called for most imperatively.

SINGER

THE grotesque appearance which many motorists assume during the winter in their endeavours to protect themselves adequately from the weather whilst motoring, is entirely unnecessary with the new SINGER Models. With the hood up and the side screens in position the car provides all the advantages of a permanently enclosed model, whilst with the hood down the rigid side screens provide complete protection from draught and side winds. If desired the rear side screens can be adjusted to form a V shaped rear screen.

Add these latest improvements to the existing reputation for reliability and service which the SINGER has held since 1912 and you get a car which should recommend itself to all discerning motorists who have the experience to appreciate those points which differentiate between the ordinary run of good cars and the SINGER.

The Coventry Premier 10 h.p. Car now manufactured by the Singer Company is the same engine, chassis, and body as the famous Singer "Ten" but without Electric Starter, Side Curtains, and certain refinements which account for the difference in the price.

SHOOTING NOTES

THE RATING OF SPORTING RIGHTS

By Nicholas Everitt.

[In view of the particular importance at the present moment of the subject discussed in this article we give it precedence over the other contributions which were to have appeared in this column. The author is taking the matter up on behalf of the Field Sports and Game Guild.—Ed.]

TO understand the present anomalies in the rating of sporting rights it is necessary to consider:

(i) The law prior to the Rating Act, 1874.
(ii) The provisions of that Act.
(iii) The Agricultural Rates Act, 1896.

In the simple case of a farm occupied by the owner or by a tenant to whom it is let without any reservation of sporting rights, the law is and always has been that the value of the sporting rights can be taken into account in assessing the land. The Act of 1874 has made no difference in this respect.

When, however, sporting rights were severed from the land (to use the technical expression), whether by reservation on the letting of the land to a farmer, or permanently by reservation to a lord of the manor under an inclosure Act, such rights were not rateable at all prior to 1874.

The effect of the Rating Act, 1874, may be stated shortly in two propositions:

(1) Where a landowner lets land at a rent and reserves the sporting rights for his own use, the land is to be rated as before the Act, i.e., at one sum to include the value of the sporting rights; but the tenant is entitled to a certificate from the Assessment Committee, stating the amount by which the rateable value is increased by reason of the added value of the sporting rights, and he may deduct from his rent the amount by which his rates are increased by reason of the value of the sporting rights, unless he has expressly agreed to pay the rates as so increased; which in practice he never does.

(2) Where the landlord reserves the sporting rights and lets them to a third party, or occupies the land himself and lets off the sporting, these rights are to be rated separately, and either the landlord or his sporting tenant may be rated; which one ultimately has to pay the rates depends, of course, on the agreement between them, but the overseers can collect the rates from whichever of the two they name in the rate book as occupier.

To give an example. Assume a farm of 500 acres, of which the rateable value would be £500 if the sporting were worth nil, and that the sporting rights are valued at 2s. an acre, i.e., £50 on the whole farm. The following are the five possible cases and the method of rating to the Poor Rate as it was before the Agricultural Rates Act:

(c) He might reserve the sporting rights and make use of them himself. Here the farmer would be rated at £550, but could deduct one-eleventh of Poor Rate from his rent.

(d) He might reserve the sporting rights and then let the latter to a third person. In this case the farmer would be rated at £500, and either the landlord or the sporting tenant (at the option of the overseers) at £50.

(e) He might occupy the land himself and let the sporting rights. In this case the law is the same as case (d).

The Agricultural Rates Act, 1896, provided that agricultural land should pay only half the rate in the pound which was charged on buildings and other hereditaments (not being agricultural land), and by an Order of the Local Government Board made under the Act a new column was added to the valuation list and rate book, so that there now is one column for the rateable value of agricultural land and another for buildings and other hereditaments not being agricultural land; and if the rate is, say, 5s. in the pound on the property in the second column, it is 2s. 6d. on that in the first column.

It should be noted that agricultural land for the purpose of the Act includes arable, pasture and meadow land, market gardens, orchards and allotments, but not land occupied with a house as a park or pleasure grounds, or land kept, or preserved, mainly for sport or recreation, or used as a racecourse. Woods are, of course, not within the Act.

The Local Government Board were empowered by the Act to make Orders for carrying it into force; and the Order by which, as above mentioned, an additional column was added to the valuation list and rate book, contained a clause to the effect that when sporting rights were severed from the land and not let (that is, when they are reserved to and enjoyed by the landlord), and the Assessment Committee have certified the amount by which the rateable value is increased by reason of the sporting rights, such amount should be included in the column for buildings and other hereditaments.

This clause has generally been considered as of no effect, on the ground that it went beyond the power of the Local Government Board, which was not authorised to alter the law, and has not in general practice been acted on.

Now for the anomalies. Taking the example above given, let us assume that the proportion of the rateable value due to farmhouse and buildings is £70, leaving £430 rateable value of land with a further £50 added for the sporting rights, and that the half-year's rate on buildings, etc., is 5s. in the pound.

Then in case (a), where owner occupies the farm and keeps the sporting, and in case (b), where the farm tenant has the sporting rights, there should be:

In the agricultural column ..	£480
Rate at 2s. 6d.		£60 0s.
In the buildings, etc., column..	70
Rate at 5s.		17 10s.

In case (c), where the landlord retains the sporting and the ordinary practice is followed, the figures will be the same as just mentioned, but the farm tenant will be entitled to a certificate (which is noted in the Valuation List) by which he will recover 2s. 6d. in the pound on £50 (the value of the sporting rights), i.e., £6 5s., from the landlord.

In cases (d) and (e), where the owner lets the land to one person and sporting rights to another, or occupies the land himself and lets off the sporting rights, the figures will be:

In agricultural column ..	£430
Rate at 2s. 6d.		£53 15s.
In buildings, etc., column—
Farm buildings	70
Rate at 5s.		17 10s.
Sporting rights	50
Rate at 5s.		12 10s.

N.B.—In this case the Union by severance, gets double the original rate on the sporting rights; if, when the rating authorities first put the sporting rights in the valuation list as a separate item, they

Fully descriptive folder sent post free

It's the Bag that counts

A GUN that consistently gives clean sure kills, even under adverse conditions, is the only weapon for the capable and experienced shot. A gun is primarily a thing of utility—if it fails in its purpose of killing it is, as a gun, useless, however much it appeals to the eye as a piece of craftsmanship.

It is the Bag that counts.

The B.S.A. Shot Gun was designed and manufactured with one ideal in view—that of producing a highly efficient killer. Every detail which effects quick, deadly shooting has been given careful thought. The weight is, for the average shot, just right (6lbs. 12oz.); the balance and handling are perfect—the gun comes up to the bird without effort; the trigger-pulls are crisp and snappy; and the strength of the parts and co-ordinated whole is sufficient to withstand any amount of ordinary wear.

The maximum killing possibilities of the ammunition are always obtained with B.S.A. Shot Guns.

omit to reduce the assessment of the land then the Union gets treble the original rate.

In some Unions, however, where the landowner reserves the shooting for himself (case (c) above), the assessment committees proceed on the principle set out in the Local Government Board's Order, and in such cases the sporting rights are rated at the full, as in the instance last given. There was recently an appeal from such a method of rating by a landowner in the Thetford Union, and the Suffolk Quarter Sessions having found in his favour, a special case was prepared with a view to taking the opinion of the High Court on the legal question. Unfortunately, the matter was compromised, so that the opportunity of testing the legality of the Local Government Board's Order was lost.

Nothing has been said about General District or Special Expenses rate. In the case of this rate both agricultural land and woodlands and land covered with water are assessable at one-quarter value only, and if the sporting rights are included in one assessment with the land the owner of the rights gets the benefit of the low assessment. Where, however, the rights are assessed separately, as in cases (d) and (e) above, the rate is payable on the full value and the Union takes quadruple the original rate.

Many small farmer-owners are unable to let their sporting rights solely because of this unfair system and owing to the heavy rates, promptly demanded from the shooting tenant, should they do so.

For example, take a 600-acre farm assessed at 20s. per acre, including sporting rights. Only half the rate in the pound is charged. His neighbour, perhaps owning adjoining woods, loses many pheasants on this land, and is willing to pay a fancy rent of 4s. (possibly more) per acre for the sporting rights. But the rating authorities would demand full rates on that amount, and if the rates are 8s. per half-year (not an unusual amount to-day) the sporting tenant would have to pay an additional 16s. on every pound paid by him—in this case £96 per annum rates or £216 in all, bringing the cost of the sporting rights up to an altogether exorbitant sum.

Therefore, can it be wondered at that in practice a certain amount of ingenuity is sometimes resorted to in order to dodge the rate, which is not to the advantage of the Assessment Unions nor can be approved of? Why should there be any difference in the rates for sporting rights, whether exercised by the owner or lessee? There seems to be a strong desire all over the country to amend these anomalies. The remedy is not far to seek.

Sporting rights should be assessed separately from the land in any event. They should be given the benefit of the Agricultural Rates Act, 1896, and placed in the same column as the land, because they literally outcrop from the land, and if the land is not properly cultivated they lose in value proportionately to land crops.

Such an alteration of the law would, more particularly, benefit the small owner and occupier of the land, because it would materially facilitate the letting of the sporting rights; it would improve his finances; it would help compensate him for any damage done by game; and it would prevent unfair rating by assessment committees, or their imposing double, treble or quadruple the amount of the original rate, which they now do in practice whenever opportunity presents.

No assessment committee should oppose this proposition, because such a law would ensure that every sporting right worthy of an assessable value would be taken into consideration separately from the land, and the rates thereon assessed and paid for at their fair value. Whereas to-day there are hundreds of thousands of acres practically unassessed for sporting rights, or if assessed, then at infinitesimal sums by reason of the sporting rights being included with the agricultural values; and special arrangements are not only frequent, but far more numerous than could be believed, whereby payment is avoided of any extra rates on a letting. It is firmly believed that such an alteration of the law would very materially benefit the owner of the sporting rights, the occupier of the land and, more particularly, every Union in every county where sporting rights exist.

READ, MARK, LEARN AND ACT.

The Spring Number. Some of us are inclined to talk about blackbirds and thrushes, others about the paired partridge and its nesting arrangements. In moments when we turn to the more practical affairs of life—those of the gunmaker for instance—another train of thought is started. This is the time when resolutions made during the shooting season to buy another gun, or even a pair of such, should early materialise into a definite order. We hear of unemployment in all quarters, of the expediency of giving out such work as our finances allow, so as to add, if it be ever so little, our own personal contribution to the tide of prosperity which is now on the make. At the present time the gun trade is suffering with all the others; its unique personnel is working on very short time, the former flow of orders from the aristocracy of Russia, Italy, Austria-Hungary, Germany, Spain and the Near East has long been dried up, while at home the majority still confine their purchases to absolute essentials. By many tests the Englishman's proudest possession is his favourite gun, the companion as well as the instrument of his finest pleasures and feats of skill. So well has the gunsmith done his work in the past that these things are as heirlooms passed on from generation to generation. And yet many examples are sadly shaken by wear and no longer display the perfect jointing which is their makers' pride, perchance, have lost that intimate fit with the ever-changing shoulder and eye which ensures instant exactitude of aim. Among the very best sportsmen there are some who never owned a gun worthy of the position they hold. Why not look into these matters and, if possible, place an order? The price of indulgence may be high, but it is not higher than the satisfaction gained; furthermore, the solid quality delivered is in as liberal proportion to the outlay as at any previous period in the history of gunmaking. Finally, don't forget the small fry in the repairs department, stocks that want lengthening to protect bruises on the middle finger, barrels with dents that need removing, ejectors that fail at critical moments, triggers that don't go off as sweetly as they should and, above all, actions that have got shaky and will get shakier with added momentum just as a stone gains speed in rolling down a precipice.

A LOSS TO THE GUNMAKERS' ASSOCIATION.

We very much regret to hear of the death of Mr. E. H. Stone, who, for a considerable number of years past, had acted in the capacity of secretary to the above Association. His connection with the firearms business began nearly thirty years ago, when he became Editor of the "Sporting Goods Review," a publication whose seemingly wide title did not fully express its almost complete specialisation on the domestic affairs of the gun trade. Not only has the double loss been sustained, but there has gone a genial personality whose list of friends numbered the whole body of his associates. The experience which he had gained during so intimate a connection with gunmaking can never be replaced, and there will be many who will miss the nicely balanced judgments concerning trade problems and happenings which were a feature of his paper. A double-buttoning front prevents wet finding an entrance between the buttonholes, and special wind-cuffs protect the wrists and fore-arms.

Defensive power and warmth-generation in The Motor Burberry are still further enhanced by linings of proofed check or silk, or by the addition of detachable linings of Fleece, Fur or Leather.

REPLACEMENT VALUES

THERE is no royal road to learning. Knowledge is acquired by continued and arduous study, while only by patient concentration can knowledge be practically applied for the benefit of ourselves and others. The way to wisdom has no short cuts: it is only in the school of experience that the valuable and delicate plant will mature, and in this school are often found specimens stinging and bitter to taste. The school of experience has an ever open door to young and old—householder, merchant or the man in the street. In our homes, our offices, our warehouses or our studies, experiences surround us. The philosopher will seek them, the observer will watch them, the wise will learn from them. One's own items of actual experience may be few, but the lessons to be learnt from the lives of others are open to all—and he who runs may read, mark, learn and inwardly benefit from them.

Sound advice may meet with various receptions. By some it will be welcomed and appreciated; by others it will be resented and ignored. Human nature has more variety than the rainbow hues, and while some seem possessed in early years of the philosopher's stone, others pass through life lacking the wisdom that may be picked up by a keen observer who is able to weave into his own web of life the lessons learned from the experience of others.

Many men are so satisfied with their own ability and methods that they are blind to experience and deaf to sound advice; to those neither this nor any other friendly warning will appeal. But some there be in business and other walks in life who recognise that success comes according to the measure of their concentration, observation and adaptation to the experiences that daily surround them. These will be alert to tread the avenues that lead to success. Their exercise of thought and foresight will show them the pitfalls in a business career and the ways by which evils and loss may come.

One of these many avenues by which loss can be avoided is the intelligence applied to the question of fire insurance. Everyone fully believes in the wisdom of insurance, but some fail to carry out the system in a systematic way.

The householder insures his furniture, pictures, personal belongings and household effects at the outset, and for years will renew the premium without a thought of the added value by accumulation and the purchase of more valuable items. The enhanced cost through the recent war has been quite overlooked. Trustees, committees, churchwardens and city or borough councillors will seek the protection of a fire policy, but the increased value of the buildings and contents is forgotten and, in the event of any of the property being burnt, a great loss is experienced.

In one case known to me the trustees of a church lost £6,000, the difference between the insured and the replacement value.

It behoves all such persons to recognise their trust and feel that there is a responsibility attached to their acceptance of it which they should keep actively in mind. Churches, schools, hospitals, libraries, public institutions and council buildings should always be insured at the replacement value, and intelligent men will see that this is done. To this end, fire insurance policies should be easily accessible for annual inspection. Too many of the insured keep them locked away in a bank vault, held by their solicitor or thrown into any old drawer. There they are apt to lie forgotten, or, should the wisdom of inspection come into the mind of the insured, the time to seek and examine the document is not then available, with the result that it is left to a more convenient season which never comes.

To avoid possible loss, the annual inspection of fire policies is as essential as the periodical overhauling and valuing of stock. The householder will recognise as important the annual spring cleaning to avoid loss by moth and rust; but how many consider the equal necessity of seeing that the contents of their home, or even the buildings, are insured to the full value? The original cost is no guide to the present value, and, while it has been my experience for the last thirty-five years that insurance companies deal generously as to claims—even at times making ex gratia payments—yet no one can expect to receive more than the sum insured by the policy.

The fuse of a wire, the flap of a curtain over a naked light, the neglect of an electric iron or the fallen match, may bring wisdom to the assured, and the experience of a serious disaster may bring about better methods—but thought and foresight might have prevented the loss.

The slipshod methods of commercial firms are past understanding. Many business men work and plan, buy and sell, use their brain and energy in building up a fine commercial establishment. They recognise the necessity of insuring and take out policies to cover the risk of fire. But the growth of their business is gradual, and their stock and effects, from an insurance point of view, accumulate unnoticed. Then may come a conflagration, with a rude awakening.

If you believe in insurance, give the matter your earnest and periodical consideration. Examine your values at the replacement cost and have your insurance policies easily available for comparison. Do the amounts agree? In the event of a fire, would the sum to be received under a fire policy be sufficient to reinstate the property and entirely make good the loss sustained?

The Conquest FIRE EXTINGUISHER

Manufactured by the Makers of the Pyrene Fire Extinguisher.

For Country House Protection

TO overcome the prevalence of disastrous Country House fires it is essential that efficient fire protection should be maintained on the spot. One of the most dependable and economical means of providing this is to install the Conquest Fire Extinguisher.

This is a two-gallon extinguisher approved by the Fire Offices Committee. Immediately upon being turned upside down it projects a powerful fire quenching jet in any required direction. The Conquest Extinguisher is effective on all ordinary outbreaks of fire, e.g., woodwork, upholstery and soft goods, paper and similar free burning materials. For highly inflammable substances and electricity the Pyrene Extinguisher is recommended.

A Book Worth Writing for.

Illustrations and full descriptions of these and our various other types of fire extinguishers and appliances, together with much useful information on fire prevention and protection, are given in the handbook, "Modern Fire Fighting."

Expert Fire Engineering Service.

This book also outlines our expert fire engineering service for Country Houses. This service includes a free initial fire survey of property and inspection of any existing fire appliances wherever distance from our nearest office permits.

EASTER HOLIDAY OUTFITS

TROUSSEAUX AND BRIDAL TOILETTES. RACE GOWNS AND WRAPS.

ALTHOUGH an exceptionally large percentage of the world where they amuse themselves has been sojourning in the South of France or enjoying strenuous pursuits in Switzerland, there are still a number of us left who are eagerly anticipating the Easter exodus from town; and with such folk the main objective is the country or some seaside resort, preparatory to facing the strain of the coming season. Optimists are promising a gay busy time, and the Royal wedding at the end of April is likely to set the ball rolling. Meanwhile, couturières are busy over preparations for Easter, for which they are providing the most delightful little frocks and three-piece suits ever imagined or created, together with smart wrap-coats, country tailor-mades, demi-toilettes and chapeaux.

Despite many rumours to the contrary, the prevailing taste still hangs round and about browns of the cinnamon, snuff, café au lait and sand character; and the gradations of tone in these are so fine that there is no suggestion, at present, of monotony. There is, for example, a sand nuance known as "sahara," a deepish rich tone; a light brown with a rose tint; another brown, distinguished as "batwing," having a greyish tinge. There are, too, several novel greys, such as cinder, cobweb and moth, all whereof are warm rather than cold of hue, hence their success in the dull worsted weaves offered to-day in such profusion: albeit the latter may be summed up into two classes, the smooth and the rough. In the former category come marocain, shanteen (a wool plagiarism of shantung); and in the latter, repp cloth (which, perhaps, is the most tentative of broken-surfaced stuffs), a flannel cloth, and so up the scale to weaves woven with rough outstanding knots. Materials, of a fact, whether of wool or silk, are momentous and epoch-breaking; consequently, far more of the success rests on them than on the fashioning, the general silhouette remaining very much as before, with a few trifling exceptions. Thus, to take a concrete case, last season a certain little wool repp frock in a pinkish cinnamon tone would have had a perfectly straight, slim skirt, whereas this year it is cut with a godet flare at the sides, which drop a trifle lower than the back and front; while the slim long bodice, with its close-fitting sleeves, has a round décolletage and a slit-down centre-front, and is worn over a separate chemisette, to which is fitted a falling collar and small grandfather frills of lace or net.

And just a pause here to point out the immense advantage such a separate vest has over a permanently attached lingerie adjunct. Initially, it can be made so easily interchangeable. Thus, one day, perhaps, there will be preferred white organdie and valenciennes lace, and on another ivory net, a third particularly dainty fancy comprising a shaped collar having points over the shoulders of vellum-tinted embroidered lawn, edged lace, the latter repeated in the frilled front.

Our great-grandmothers knew a thing or two, and in the early 'sixties similar little chemisettes figured conspicuously in the dress of that period; while from the same era history is repeating itself in short capes, slung round the neck, with a scarf collar.

Reverting to our frock of cinnamon repp, just vision the attraction with one of these slight street wraps (lined black marocain, the whole completed by a cloche hat of silk marocain, rather darker in tone than the costume) mushroom-coloured silk stockings and black patent leather shoes; and, just to pleasantly break the scheme, a posy of loosely tied violets pinned among the lace frills. Does not this picture sound enchanting?—and yet, surely, nothing more demure could possibly be conceived. Attire carefully thought out from chapeau to shoes is the insignia of all the best dressed women of to-day.

Country suits of rough-surfaced checks, many of which are woven with a shawl fringe, are offered in a profusion of choice. Those with fringe display this running down the one side of that useful and supremely comfortable fold-over habit-skirt, and again as a finish to the wide scarf-collar; and such suits are usually supplemented by the shortest of short jumpers of cloth, fancy silk knitting, or a novel metal-woven silk of fanciful design and in many colours. In the case of a rough cream-coloured ground material checked over in red, black and white, there was worn a white cloth jumper that disappeared beneath a deep scarlet kid belt. A snuff brown similarly checked, with a soupçon of green included, boasted a metal-woven silk jumper that ended quite loosely and abruptly at the waist.

And, for the crowning triumph of these jolly country suits, there are hats every whit as novel and alluring, chiefly of the "comfy" pull-on order. There is one especially delightful model entirely composed of stitched ribbon, with a cactus rosette at one side of the same; or another all close lines of chenille, as flexible as panama or a good fur felt, and folding up as easily, as does also an Angora straw which is obtainable in the most wonderful flecked mixtures.

The ever useful and hard-wearing Bangkok is as much in request as ever, a wide-brimmed shape having recently made its appearance that will be heartily welcomed by older women whose faces and figures are altogether out of harmony with the petite shapes. Neat, lightly brogued, one-strap brown shoes with low heels, and striped or patterned thin wool stockings, complete an ensemble that will carry its owner successfully through the Easter recess, either in the country or at the sea.

Respecting the remainder of a holiday outfit, it is only possible to generalise. So much depends upon whether one stays with friends or at some hotel; also, whether a simple life is likely to be led, or a gay one. In any case, however, an afternoon gown, scarcely distinguishable nowadays from the old-time demi-toilette, is ever a safe possession—a choice that varies from a studiously simple draped marocain, crêpe de Chine or georgette, some elaboration of printed silk or silk crêpe—one or two evening toilettes and a wrap-coat forming a text that can be added to according to the destined social requirements.

The art of travelling light is one of the most invaluable lessons taught us by the war. A flat dress-box of compressed cane reinforced by hoops of light wood and a capacious hat-box of like character comprise the regulation travelling impedimenta of to-day; and it is always well worth while to give a fair price for these receptacles, since that ensures a good waterproof lining, sound locks and hard-wearing quality throughout.

Some women are born packers and will get more into one dress-box than another will get into two; and the secret is close packing and a discreet and moderate use of paper. Fortunately, the dress of the day does not require to have the sleeves, bodice and furbelows stuffed with tissue; in fact, the flatter and closer they are packed the better they travel. Then it is quite the exception to see the old cumbersome dressing-case, such jewels as are deemed necessary going into a small hand case—a compact, flat-lidded affair that the wise never allow out of sight. Inaugurated under the auspices of motoring, such cases are fitted with all the requisite toilet appurtenances in the guise of miniature brushes, mirror, scent-bottles, etc., sufficient space being left in the centre for valuables.

A marked change has come over the bridal toilette of late, the first notable innovation being the Renaissance gown, long and clinging, with jewelled girdle; and this style is still much affected, the more recent models displaying draperies and caught-up folds in the front. The exquisite brocades, glinting with silver and frequently with golden lights, the soft marocains and the wonderful lamés lend themselves especially well to such simple classical treatment, to which a manteau de cour imparts a finishing touch of exceeding elegance and dignity.

After this manner is the original model illustrated, a gown expressed in silver lamé, the skirt draped up in front over a petticoat of silvered lace, and held at the waist by a beautiful wing-shaped ornament of pearls and diamanté, two ropes of pearls extending from this up either side the corsage to the shoulders. For the long, tight sleeves, with their charming up and down flaring cuffs, the silver lace is again requisitioned, and it likewise lines the train of cloth of silver, that is trimmed at one corner with a spray of orange blossoms and at the other by a lover's knot of diamanté, mingled with the bridal bloom.

Special note should be made of the Egyptian type of head-dress that falls in so appropriately with the Eastern draperies of the gown. It is effected in silvered lace, held at the side by hanging clusters of orange blossoms, the veil set on very full at either side.

For her retinue of maids, a bride so attired would doubtless select frocks fashioned on similar draped lines, in a tender shade of pink broché velvet ninon, worn with pink tulle veils.

There are certain signs and tokens of the full Second Empire modes making a bid for bridal favour. For these are used failles and poult de soie, lavishly embroidered in beads, bugles, diamanté and pearls; and, rather fussily busy as these dresses are, there is no denying their picturesque character, nor yet their novelty as bridal attire, the filles d'honneur picking up the story in hipped

A SUGGESTION FOR THE RACE-GOER.

Very typical of what will be worn at the early spring races is this plain and figured wool marocain in a wallflower shade of brown. A pleasant break to the harmony being imparted by a sash of soft woven silk, striped in the Egyptian manner, in tones of red, orange, blue and black.

Illustrated is a representative costume that shows the revived vogue for the short mess jacket or bolero. The scheme of colouring is wallflower brown, and the material wool marocain—plain for the skirt and figured for the jacket, the latter having telling little touches of dull black satin introduced in the collar and on the cuffs. For the sash there is requisitioned a soft woven silk, striped in Egyptian manner in tones of red, orange, blue and black, on a deep cream ground, the accompanying chapeau emphasising the warm brown, in straw or silk marocain ornamented with a clever garniture of ribbon cleverly manipulated to resemble a feather.

GREYNESS CURED IN THREE WEEKS

How Society Men and Women Re-create their Hair's Lost Colour

FREE TREATISE

How Society men and women guard against the social and business handicap of Grey Hair is revealed in a dainty little Boudoir Book just published.

This book will not take you ten minutes to read, yet it discloses the secret by which you can grow glossy, abundant, and silken hair, and—most important of all—preserve it from the greying and disfiguring touch of Time by the one treatment endorsed by the Press.

No matter how long the greyness has existed the lost colour is restored.

And not only is it completely restored, but is restored permanently—it is not painted from outside.

You can easily prove this. When the colour has been restored, just wash your hair and scrub it as hard as you can. Not a speck of colour comes away. This is because the colour is part of the very structure of your hair, and not a dye or stain.

The One Method Endorsed by the Press.

"THE QUEEN" (and "COURT CHRONICLE") says:

"'Facktative' certainly is admirable in its result. Its effects are permanent, it is delightfully clean and easy to use."—"There are other points which commend it, its admirable effects upon the general health and condition of the hair, and so on; but it is in its wonderful powers of restoring the actual colour to the hair that its chief interest lies."

"THE LADY" says:

"Many who object to using dyes will be glad to know of this excellent preparation, for it has none of the drawbacks of a hair stain. 'Facktative' soon establishes a sheen and brilliance which greatly enhances the beauty of the hair."

"SUNDAY TIMES" says:

"'Facktative' is Nature's own remedy and of its efficiency one can scarcely speak sufficiently in praise. . . . I have personally used this restorative. . . . I can myself testify to the truth of all it professes to accomplish." — HYGEIA (Editress "Secrets of Health and Beauty.")

Space forbids but a few brief extracts only, but accompanying the free Boudoir Book is sent full, independent and spontaneous testimony which the sterling merits of "Facktative" have called forth from these and numerous other authorities from all parts. Readers should write to-day to the "FACKTATIVE" Co. (Suite 17), 66, Victoria Street, for a free treatise, which will be sent post free in plain sealed envelope.

THE FOLLY OF DYES.

Dyes and artificial hair paints are, of course, strictly tabooed by men and women of refinement. This is not only good taste, but good sense as well. Dyed hair is always conspicuous. It literally shouts the embarrassing information that its colour came out of a bottle. Further, dye ruins the hair's structure and health, rots it away, and causes it to fall out.

There is only one satisfactory method of curing greyness and loss of hair colour. This is to re-create, naturally, your hair's real colour from root to tip. You will find how to do this between the gold and ivorine covers of the book mentioned above. You can obtain a copy of this book gratis and post free.

Remarkable results follow this method.

Right from the first your hair becomes less and less grey.

IMPROVES HAIR-HEALTH AND BEAUTY.

Besides restoring the lost colour, this treatment improves and tones up your hair in every way.

It removes all accumulations of Scurf or Dandruff.

It banishes irritation of the scalp.

It invigorates and vitalises the hair and promotes a strong luxuriant growth.

It prevents the hair falling out and baldness.

It makes your hair beautifully glossy and silky and endows it with a soft lustrous shimmer, and facility in handling and dressing.

Finally, by restoring your hair to exactly the same shade and depth of colour as it possessed before it became faded, dull or grey, it makes you look years younger, and even takes as much as 10 to 15 years from your apparent age.

BOOK OF HAIR-HEALTH & BEAUTY FREE

Should you be troubled with white, grey, greying, faded or otherwise discoloured hair you should write to-day to the "FACKTATIVE" Co. FROM THE EDITOR'S BOOKSHELF

Black Oxen, by Gertrude Atherton. (7s. 6d.)

IS there any subject which more certainly interests everyone than that of age? Most of us are longing to be older or younger, or busy persuading ourselves that whatever age is ours is best, and in one way or the other anno domini rings in every ear. Mrs. Atherton has done cleverly, then, in turning to use the recent Continental discoveries as to rejuvenation by certain methods, and in making them the theme of her new novel. Black Oxen is sure to be widely read and widely discussed: needless to say, it is extremely well written. There is one short scene in which the spade of sex repression is not only called by its proper name, but flourished rather alarmingly in the reader's face, yet that has its value in giving the air of scientific truth which is part of Mrs. Atherton's cleverness. Perhaps that cleverness is the book's strongest point, for although Marie Zittiany is convincing, both in her beauty and her renewed youth, she is not lovable, and being outside human experience, she seems also outside human regard. Lee Clavering, too, the young man who loves her, never comes close to the reader with that warm touch of living flesh and blood which makes great fiction. Arresting, interesting, and above all, clever, Mrs. Atherton has not written a great book, but she has written a novel extremely well worth reading, and has left one reader at least content that the Black Oxen of the years shall move on with the marks of their tramping hoofs unexpunged.

Echo, by Margaret Rivers Larminie. (Chatto and Windus. 7s. 6d.).

THERE is a quality not easy to define in Miss Larminie's writing, which nevertheless makes it noticeable. Echo is the story of a man and woman who loved and married, each thinking that the other had some other motive; she that he was honourably afraid of having compromised her: he that she accepted the refuge he offered her from a somewhat offended world and the solving of her problem of livelihood. It has been argued that no two lovers could be housemates for many months under such conditions, without discovering the truth of each other's hearts; but pride is as strong as love in many people, and far more active, and Miss Larminie has endowed Charles and Melita each with so full a share of it, that she has certainly made out a probable case, in view of their temperaments and circumstances. It seems a pity that the lover of Melita's girlhood had to be identified with the good friend of her womanhood: there is something curiously repulsive in the situation, as it is recalled years afterwards, which one might not have felt if their life together had actually fallen within the scope of the book—but then Miss Larminie would have had no dénouement to break to us at the end.

Pauline, by Baroness de Knoop. (Allen and Unwin, 7s. 6d.)

OUT of the pages of Baroness de Knoop's novel, Pauline emerges as an extraordinarily real and appealing little figure. I can believe that she was gifted almost to the point of genius, and yet so naive as sometimes to be tiresome; I can sympathise with the lover who told her that she was ugly, and yet I am sure that now and then she was rarely beautiful. Her story—her neglected girlhood, her marriage to an elderly Russian nobleman who treated her as an adored child and scarcely let the wind of Heaven blow upon her, and, after his death, her love for the selfish, coarse-fibred young Englishman who in the end could not bring himself to breathe air so rare as her view of life demanded—is simple and clear. Its telling in hundreds of short sentences, of similes far-stretched and fancies running riot, will probably destroy the enjoyment of half its readers. Now and then the transcription of Pauline's thoughts verges on—no, falls into—the ridiculous; now and then it conveys exactly what a woman so placed would feel with a perfection which is so beautiful that one forgives pages of exaggeration. The account of Pauline's days with her German aunt, Princess Hermione, at her house near Cassel, recalls with lovely clarity a Germany before the war which now can only be remembered with a pang as something extraordinarily pleasant gone for the lifetime of the present generation. having the latter part of his story perused when both the critical and the appreciative faculties may be supposed to be slightly impaired by weariness. Although it was in this fashion that we reached our opinion of "Ovington's Bank," that does not detract from the confidence with which we pronounce it to be well up to Mr. Weyman's sample. Experiments and fumblings after new "forms" are not for him; having a perfect mastery in an old tradition he can well afford to remain in it. He goes this time in search of picturesque incident to the period, after the slump following the Napoleonic wars, when a time of wonderful prosperity (during which the railways began to develop and banks everywhere displaced the teapot or the old stocking as a recipient for savings) was succeeded by a sudden and disastrous slump. Admirers of Mr. Weyman, without further hints, will imagine the ease with which, tracing the fortunes of a provincial bank and those who controlled it through this critical period, he is able to build up an exciting story and infuse into it, by subtle and suggestive touches, the glow of actuality.

SOME BOOKS OF THE DAY.

Two books of travel particularly attract attention this week: Mr. Ashley Gibbon's brightly written account of Ceylon, "the Isle of Sweet Savours," Cinnamon and Frangipanni (Chapman and Dodd, 21s.), giving a good deal of interesting native folk-lore and tradition; and The Lango (T. Fisher Unwin, 63s.), by Mr. J. H. Driberg, an important volume very fully illustrated. The author is in the Uganda Civil Service and has made good use of his opportunities. His book is serious and informative, but full of interest; for instance, the mere photographs of the queer-looking "otogos" or bachelor huts of the Nilotic tribe would send almost anyone to his letterpress to find their description. Mr. Hilaire Belloc's new book of essays, On (Methuen, 6s.), has appeared and shall have further space devoted to it here, as also shall Edmund Loder (Murray, 18s.), by Sir Alfred Pease, and Aspects of the Italian Renaissance (Grant Richards, 12s. 6d.), by Rachael Annand Taylor, which has an introduction by Professor Gilbert Murray.

The first volume of M. Maurice Paléologue's reminiscences, An Ambassador's Memoirs (Hutchinson, 18s.), covers his experiences as French Ambassador at the Russian Court from July, 1914, to June, 1915. Recollections of a Rolling Stone (Hurst and Blackett, 16s.) is by Mr. Basil Tozer, and many well known names appear in his pages. He gives a horrible account of seal-hunting with the Newfoundland fishermen.

The Designs of Leon Bakst for "The Sleeping Princess" (£6 6s.) come from Messrs. Benn, most beautifully reproduced—a splendid volume reflecting the greatest credit on the publishers, it is foreordained to delight the artist's admirers.

Efficient Marketing for Agriculture (Macmillan, 12s. 6d.) is by Dr. Theodore Macklin, and the subject is one of a very deep importance. The Rev. Herbert Brown has contrived a pleasant mingling of bee fact and bee fancy in his little book, A Bee Melody (Melrose, 6s.).

Novels received include Colleagues (Chapman and Hall, 7s. 6d.), a first novel by Miss Geraldine Waite, which should be, at least in one sense, remarkable, in that we are assured that it is "a novel without a man." At any rate, there are some quite good descriptions of life in a training college for women. Out of Bondage (Duckworth, 7s. 6d.) is by Miss Olive Mary Salter, and a book of cleverly written short stories called after the first of their number, Speed the Plough (Chapman and Hall, 7s. 6d.), by Miss Mary Butts. A new novel from Miss Ellen Thorneycroft Fowler, The Lower Pool (Hutchinson, 7s. 6d.), promises good entertainment; and from the same publishers, at the same price and equally welcome, is Sir Rider Haggard's Wisdom's Daughter, the last of the trilogy of the renowned "She" and written as by Ayesha herself. Two more Hutchinson novels are Rooted Out, by Dorothea Conyers, a novel of the transplanted Irishman still devoted to horse and hound, and The Red Vulture, by Frederick Sleath. That very remarkable book, Tamarisk Town (Cassell, 3s. 6d.), is the latest of Miss Sheila Kaye-Smith's novels to appear in the complete edition.

The Journal of the Royal Horticultural Society (Spottiswoode, Ballantyne, 5s.) for January contains articles of considerable interest by several writers well known in the world of horticulture. S.

THE COW JUMPED OVER THE MOON

By J. B. MORTON, Author of "The Barber of Putney," &c.

In his latest book Mr. Morton gives a delightful account of the invasion of a small village by a robust beer-drinking philosopher, who first confounds, then converts, and is finally repudiated by the local powers. On this background the tale of Michael Cobb's relations with Hazel is brought to an ingenious, if unexpected, conclusion—with which the reader may agree, or may not, but will at least be intrigued.

"This pleasant, fresh little tale, which is much the richer for its simple, unaffected humour. The characters are drawn with a sure and kindly hand."—Pall Mall and Globe.

Making GOOD Brake Lining——BETTER

When Ferodo Bonded Asbestos has gone through the process of DIE-PRESSING—it has reached, as things stand at present, the highest point of usefulness.

DIE-PRESSING IS A PATENTED Ferodo process — an extra process — it produces the SUPER Brake Lining.

We are the only firm in the business who maintain a staff of engineers and chemists exclusively employed on research work, and we discovered that vertical pressure up to 1,000 tons on each piece of Ferodo Bonded Asbestos produced a dense mass, as hard as iron, which could not be compressed in use.

You never have to adjust the brake except to take up wear. Nothing can create brake confidence like FERODO DIE-PRESSING, and you can expect at least double the wear when you use Ferodo Die-pressed Brake Lining.

DIE-PRESSING makes GOOD Brake Lining BETTER.

FOR REFERENCE

PAINTWORK IN DECORATIVE SCHEMES.

THERE has recently been a resuscitation of a very ancient method of mural painting, that is, with a mixture of wax and colour. Sticks of coloured wax were melted into little pots or on a palette, and the tones applied to the panel with a brush. Heated irons were used to unite the tones. On the cooled palette intermediate tones could be taken up and mixed with the irons. It was this method of encaustic painting and decorating which was used by Michael Angelo in the Sistine Chapel. Wax paint has proved itself extraordinarily long wearing, but such a method would be too laborious and expensive for general use to-day. The "Wallpax" paint has accordingly been produced, made of a blend of hard waxes, rather than the soft waxes of the ancients, and no warming of it is required. It is guaranteed free from animal matter and glue in any form, and also from water and lime or any ingredient liable to encourage the lodgment of bacteria. It is made by Messrs. Samuel Wills and Co., Limited, of Bristol and London, within whose Bristol works are the precincts of the old castle of that city. They claim for "Wallpax" that there is no decorative purpose to which it cannot be put, and recommend its use for carriage and high-class motor bodywork. "The House Made Beautiful with Paint" is the title of an interesting little booklet which Messrs. Samuel Wills and Co. will send, post free, on application.

ADVICE ON LIGHTING.

It is a fact beyond dispute that a room will appear well or ill furnished, though it contains the same pieces of furniture, and the decoration is unchanged, according to the place and power of its illuminants. Most rooms are schemed for their daylight effect, their artificial lighting is arranged more or less satisfactorily, generally with no scientific knowledge of the subject. Those who use such rooms are conscious that the effect of the lighting arrangements is unsatisfying, certain details that should be brought out are lost, the light shines sharply where it should be diffused, and in fact that the room has lost in pleasantness, although actually artificial light offers the decorator his greatest opportunity. The Holophane Company, whose showrooms are at 31, Elverton Street, Vincent Square, Westminster, are well known as illumination specialists, and anyone dissatisfied with existing lighting arrangements would be well advised to consult the experts of the Holophane Company, who point out changes which it would be advisable to initiate, without any expense to the enquirer or the incurring of any obligations. Thirty years of the study of lighting problems have placed the Holophane Company in an unique position, and very often not only improvements in lighting, whether electricity or gas, but economies in its cost will result from their advice. Demonstrations of scientific illumination are given to those interested at the Company's Showrooms.

A WORD TO REMEMBER.

The average man is very ill informed with regard to materials, and very much in the hands of the outfitter when it becomes necessary for him to make a choice. He will certainly do well to impress the word "Luvisca" on his memory, and insist on getting "Luvisca" garments when he is next purchasing underwear. "Luvisca" is a combination of artificial silk of the most modern excellence and high grade cotton, the finished article having all the appearance of silk, and being far more lasting in wear. It is sold in a variety of neat shirt and pyjama stripes, to suit all tastes, as well as plain colours. Messrs. Courtaulds, Limited, 19, Alderman-bury, E.C.2, will send names of retailers of "Luvisca" garments upon request.

The pretty fashion of sending Easter gifts to friends and relatives is becoming more and more popular, and well it may, for it serves to mark the happy season of the spring's real arrival, and offers a pleasant opportunity of making return for little kindnesses and courtesies. No better Easter gifts could be suggested than those manufactured by Messrs. Fry, excellent in quality, dainty in manufacture and original in design.

THE day of the useless, expensive and super-decorated Easter Egg is passing, if it has not already passed. The same remark applies to the gorgeous bonbonnieres of pre-war days.

To-day one looks for more sensible presents, which in the case of Charbonnel & Walker take the form of "Boites Blanches" with Seasonable mottoes; chocolates by weight in boxes; or chocolate eggs, sabots, hares, fishes, etc. It should be noted that the outside shell of these, as well as the contents, consists of the finest chocolate only.

Price Lists as follows on application.

Boites Blanches. Green list. Chocolates by weight. Purple list. Chocolate Eggs, etc. Brown list.

DUNKLEY

GOLD MEDAL SAFETY PRAMS

No jolts and jars can reach Baby in his Dunkley. The delicate spine is not disturbed at every kerb or patch of rough cobbles. The frame is scientifically built so that Baby rests secure and comfortable. Health is not endangered. Because of patent features in construction, the Dunkley is the only best baby carriage in the world—not simply one of the best. If you would protect your Baby's health, choose a Dunkley.

Notice that the handles are not fixed to the body but to the chassis. This improvement has been made so that each time you press down the handles to turn, or cross a kerb, the ends of the springs are still left resilient. Jarring and Vibration are impossible. This is but one important feature which will appeal to every mother. Make no pram purchase until you see the Dunkley—and it is well worth remembering that a Dunkley will always sell again for a large part of its original price.

On sale at Barker's, Army & Navy Stores, Civil Service Supply Association; and by best dealers everywhere; by 10,000 Garages, or sent direct carriage paid by express passenger train.

When Easter comes—

WHEN Easter comes, no matter how early, it is usually reckoned that Spring is not far behind. And Easter means, among other things, new shoes for My Lady—shoes of a lighter and daintier style, of a more alluring shape and even shade than any previous Spring. For My Lady's shoes grow more charming with each succeeding year, and in England now no self-respecting woman but pays as much attention to her footwear as to her hats and gloves.

GO TO THE NEAREST NORVIC DEPOT

and see the new Spring styles in NORVIC and MASCOT Shoes, or write for the new Style Booklet and the name of the nearest Depot. Your choice in Spring Shoes will be materially helped.

The style illustrated is made in Black or Nigger Glacé Kid, Patent, and Grey Velvetta Calf.

THE MANOR HOUSE

HASLEMERE.

Situated in beautiful country, well away from the town, and commanding glorious views over one of the prettiest parts of Surrey. The whole Estate is situated on the southern slope, and there is sufficient area to ensure absolute privacy. It marches with a large estate east and south, and on the north and west it is protected by a high range of hills and a large wood.

The House has only small accommodation, some fourteen bedrooms and five sitting rooms. It has all modern conveniences installed, and is in splendid order for a property of its age. There is some very fine XVIIIth century panelling, and the exterior from an architectural point of view appears to be absolutely unspoilt.

There are two good cottages, garage, good kitchen garden, while the flower gardens are some of the most beautiful in the whole country and are not by any means expensive to maintain.

The Estate provides excellent rough shooting, and the adjoining estates are preserved. Possibly additional shooting could be obtained over an area of 300 or 400 acres, or a larger shoot might be rented in the immediate neighbourhood.

THE PROPERTY WILL BE SOLD with vacant possession of the House and gardens on June 24th next, and the price required with a minimum area of 100 ACRES is £20,000.

It can only be viewed by appointment made through the agents.

THE ORIGINAL PERMANENT DYE

BIG REDUCTIONS IN PRICE

LOWER costs of raw materials and manufacturing now enable Durobelle fabrics to be sold at substantially reduced prices. As raw cotton has recently advanced to double the figure of a year ago, it may be impossible to maintain the present low prices for any length of time. Therefore, early advantage should be taken of the present offers, as the reductions will show very substantial economies on the renovation of window draperies and coverings.

From first to last you will find Durobelle a true economy. Use Durobelle in the sunniest situations, wash it without fear, for its most delicate shades will remain unaffected even by tropical sun after years of use. You can choose from an immense range of beautiful colours and textures in plain, self-stripes and damask effects.

The 1923 range of distinctive Allen Cretonnes (including Cumberland Prints) is more fascinating than ever, and contains most attractive values. Write for Pattern Book

The Aristocracy of Damask

THERE is an exclusive dignity about an "Old Bleach" Table Cloth which is unrivalled by any other table fashion.

The shining surface of the damask, with its varied and dignified designs, shows off fine silver and glass to perfection.

"Old Bleach" table cloths are bleached by the sun by the old slow process which gave the linens of bygone days their wonderful lustre.

Look for the "Old Bleach" Stamp woven into the four corners of all genuine "Old Bleach Table" Damasks for it is a guarantee not only of absolute purity but also an undertaking to replace all goods which prove unsatisfactory.

Write to Randalstown for Portfolio (posted free), containing ten beautiful designs based upon celebrated Old English Porcelain, also the addresses of shops at which they are obtainable.

A study of the current modes in footwear is the foundation of correct ideas in dress. To promote this knowledge and keep it up-to-date Manfield's are publishing periodically in the pages of "Country Life" groups of favoured vogues and styles of the period, as interpreted by their expert designers and craftsmen.

Everyone, it is thought, will welcome this revelation of foot fashions from such a source of inspiration.

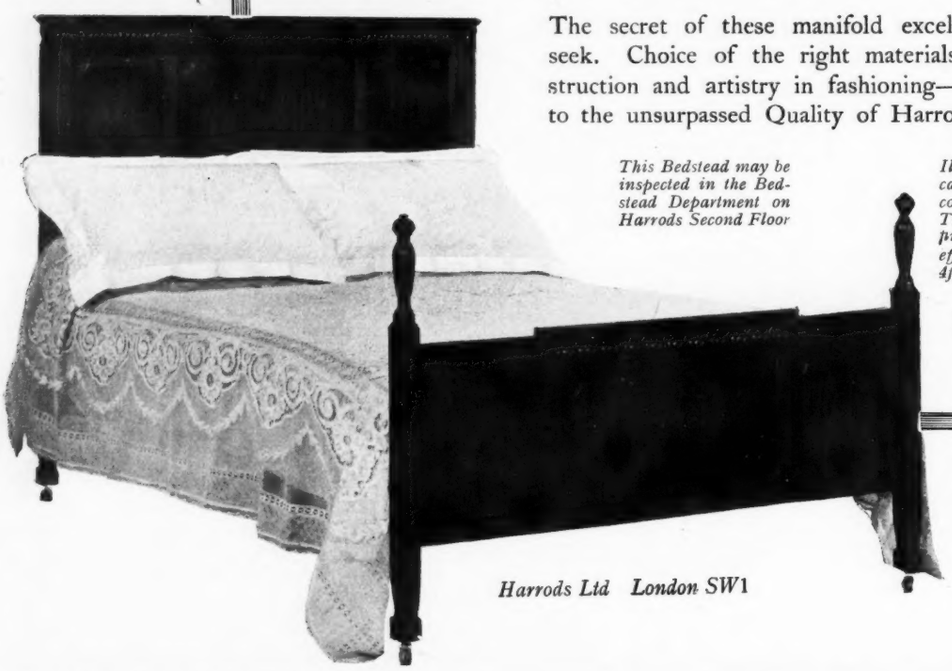
A Harrods Bedstead

Harmony in bedroom furnishing focuses naturally on the Bedstead; therefore such grace and dignity of design as Harrods offer throughout their Galleries, become essentials. Yet not so essential, perhaps, as that greatest of all Bedstead virtues—comfort; and here again Harrods achieve an unquestioned superiority.

The secret of these manifold excellences is not far to seek. Choice of the right materials, experience in construction and artistry in fashioning—these give the clue to the unsurpassed Quality of Harrods Bedsteads.



This Bedstead may be inspected in the Bedstead Department on Harrods Second Floor

Notable Value-for-Money Car

"I FEEL safe in saying that there is no car in the world except this that is offered to the purchaser at actually lower prices than were asked and obtained for its pre-war equivalent from the same factory."

From the "Overseas Daily Mail," March 10th, 1923.

"It seems difficult," the same writer continues, "to believe that the British automobile industry—or any other for that matter—could offer to the public of 1923 a car that should actually be better value for money than any car available before the war at round about the same price.

"I know only one car that by its paper specification, as well as by these other matters, really does give to its owner something more and something better than he could have bought at its price before the war.

"This car is the 18 h.p. Armstrong Siddeley.

"In the modernity of its design and in the efficiency of its construction the purchaser has appealing to him certain attractions that will offer their appeal almost equally well from a few—but not many—other cars. But there is surely no other car that offers a six-cylinder engine and chassis of first-class design and construction throughout, bodywork that would satisfy the most fastidious, and a reputation second to none—and this is important—for the sum of £660."

"STOP DECAY THE BERGER WAY"

GOOD paint makes very little difference to the size of the decorator's bill, for labour is by far the greatest cost. But it makes a world of difference to the length of time your house stays painted.

This is why you should allow your decorator to use Berger Pompeian Paint for front doors, window frames, etc., as well as for inside painting. Pompeian Paint is made to the stringent specification of H.M. Office of Works, is used by Government Contractors, and gives in two coats only a beautiful and durable finish with a high and lasting gloss equal to that of varnished paint.

SHOOTING NOTES

By Max Baker.

A TRIP TO WINCHESTER COLLEGE.

RECENTLY I paid an agreeable visit to Winchester College for the double purpose, first, of inspecting their new indoor rifle range and, second, discussing one or two questions connected with the landscape target which has been issued for use in this year's Country Life competition. The range building I found to be in harmonious blend with a series of new structures now pretty well completed but awaiting those tidying-up attentions which greatly assist the outside prospect. The weather was so terrible that by the time puddles on the way had been negotiated and shelter reached, the interioral one claimed my thoughts. In the picture the general arrangement is well shown, with in addition the clear suggestion that no such perspective would have been possible in the absence of an ample space to accommodate spectators. The lighting is good at the firing point, though not quite all that could be desired on the target. This, in fact, is the range once referred to in these notes which I hoped might be endowed with top lighting throughout its length on the saw-roof system; but, unfortunately, very eminent architects are more keen on architecture than on rifle shooting. A suggestion of mine which has been carried out is the provision of a bullet catcher consisting of a simple bank of fine sand the full width of the butts. Its height is about 3ft., slope 45° and its foundation a couple of floor boards set on edge. From the firing point it presents an unbroken background of light khaki colour, catches the top illumination to perfection and reflects a perfect neutral tint free of all structure and detail. When a bullet strikes the splash is clearly visible, but loose sand at once trickles into the wound and so restores the surface. A few minutes' attention twice a week keeps all in order, and a useful harvest of scrap lead is expected at the end of the season. The arrangement is vastly superior to stop plates, which have the nasty habit of splashing, not to forget their poor imitation of the Bisley butts.

WINCHESTER'S NEW INDOOR RANGE.

ALL LAND SHOULD BE KEEPERED.

I am peculiarly interested in Mr. Nicolas Everitt's statement of the position as to the rating assessment laid upon shooting rights. Although everybody who pays any species of tax is liable to look on his own burden as one that works against the general interest, the fact remains that a definite total must be raised, also we must bear in mind the good old saying that hard cases make bad law. But here we have rather a different situation, for we are offering a greater aggregate payment than at present. Shooting, moreover, is a productive pleasure; not only do its rents relieve some of the charges on farming and its fees enhance the emoluments of the agricultural labourer but it contributes to the national supply a definite total of food which would not otherwise be produced. Indirectly it leads to the better care of our woods and forests, and it serves to check destructive trespassing of the kind which is now so rampant where facilities for road transport turn loose whole loads of people who entertain no species of regard for the welfare of crops. But highest verity of all in recommendation of whatever assistance can be given to the extension of properly organised shooting areas is the regulation it ensures of harmful species, destructive alike to the crops and minor livestock of the farmer, the small holder and the cottager. Experience has proved that you can't catch rabbits by Act of Parliament, and it is proving with daily increasing certainty that rats are equally immune to such instrumentality—beastly and constructively dangerous as are the wandering samples of disease-infested rodents whose bodies are slowly eroding away under the influence of virus infection. A vast mass of prejudice must be broken down before the truth is realised that the methods of the gamekeeper are exclusively those by which human-grown crops can be reserved for their proper owners. Naturalists who might render useful help in making this fundamental truth clear are, unfortunately, among the most prejudiced. They prate about the balance of nature, forgetting that the balance has for ever been upset by the dominance of man.

A FINE PIECE OF GUNWORK.

As giving some idea of what the gun trade can accomplish when given the chance, I here present a pair of views of a Boss 14-bore, which by a lucky concurrence of events I was able to purchase at a price within my means. As will be seen, it is the third of a set of three guns. My interest in it was inspired before I even saw it, for one of the members of the firm told me a few years back that they had going through a set of guns which they firmly believed represented the highest standard of accomplishment the firm had ever attained. And here it is to-day—mine. Bring a 14-bore it stimulated my particular interest, because, apart from the conveniences of sticking to the standard calibre, its cartridge undoubtedly expresses modern shooting requirements better than any alternative. As to the gun itself, the barrels at 29ins. long weigh 2lb. 9 ozs, the stock and action 3lb. 0.8 oz. and the fore-end 6.8 oz., so making a total weight of a fraction of an ounce over six pounds. What is always interesting to note in such instances is that when a maker is not tied to 12-bore tube weight he always makes the stock and action weigh considerably more than the barrels. Thus we here gain knowledge of the ideal proportion of darts.

TWO VIEWS OF A BOSS 14-BORE.

AN ALTERNATIVE THEORY.

Mr. Walter Scott, Chemist, of Saffron Walden, writes: "Going back to the spontaneous combustion of cartridges in a loader's pocket. I have taken a keen interest in all the correspondence in your paper with regard to the cause. From trivial things sometimes big accidents occur, and I have been wondering if a theory I have formed might not account for several cartridges going off at the same time. Every day we sell chlorate of potash tablets to all sorts and conditions of people, which are used for sore mouths and throats, and it is a very common practice indeed to carry a few loose ones in the pocket. Supposing the victim had some of these tablets in his pocket at the time of the accident, they may have been put there that morning. Also supposing that he had a box of safety matches in his pocket, the rubbing of the match box against the tablet or tablets would cause them to explode or detonate. Chlorate of potash is also used in the manufacture of matches because it gives up oxygen so readily. If a small quantity of the chlorate is mixed with a small quantity of red phosphorus, the friction caused by lightly rubbing it with a spatula is sufficient to cause the mixture to detonate violently. If a chlorate of potash tablet be rubbed on the side of a safety match box it explodes at once with great heat. I put six of the tablets in an old coat pocket, and the sides of two match boxes, with several empty cartridges, and gave the pocket a little rough usage on the floor; the coat ignited at once and was almost burnt out. Cartridges are looked upon as so safe that people frequently carry a box of matches in the same pocket with them! If it happened to be the case that the loader had a few of these tablets in his pocket, then I think it quite a feasible solution to such an extraordinary accident."

CHINESE CARVED JADE

ARMS AND ARMOUR. THE ROSENHEIM COLLECTION.

JADE, the most precious of all hard stones, was regarded by Chinese artists and connoisseurs almost as an object of worship, and neither time, talent nor labour was spared in the fashioning of it into beautiful forms. How the most intricate designs, marvellously undercut with ornament in the interstices, were ever carried out in such an extremely hard material is almost impossible now to ascertain. The patient hands of the Chinese artists from early times carved it into a multitude of beautiful objects of almost every shape and use—vases innumerable, figures of immortals, children, beasts, birds, fishes and insects, symbolic and mythological figures and flowers. Some of those cups and vases were the ancestors of our common domestic pottery, and one type of Chinese wine vessel in shape is exactly like a modern ceramic teapot. Jade was used for vessels and utensils in the temples of China.

The great charm of jade, however, lies in its range of soft tones of colour—snowy white and ebony black, grey ethereal tints, shades of yellow deepening into brown or flushing into orange or rose, various greens, above all, the most exquisite emerald ever seen. All these have a lustrous effect as if coming from the centre of the stone. Truly is it written "The spirit of jade is like a beautiful woman."

This quotation is cited by Captain Harold Spink in a very charming brochure, "Chinese Carved Jade," illustrated by over fifty fine specimens in the collection in King Street, now on exhibition. One of the most striking objects there is a remarkable wine ewer, possibly of sacrificial use, which, as far as is known, is unique. The jade is dark green of extraordinary translucency. In shape it is cylindrical, with a moulded base and curved spout rising from boldly carved ornament. The rim is slanting and scalloped, and from the centre arises a cover very richly carved and pierced. From one side projects a slip of curved outlines with openings, through which passes a cord attached at one end to the cover and at the other terminating in a tassel. Such is the handle. On the body the magic jewel wrapped in flames, for ever pursued by the celestial dragon, and other details are beautifully carved. It is early eighteenth century work. In contrast is the reposing bullock in grey jade marbled with lighter tones and white. It is of massive form, simple and bold in workmanship, and was probably carved in the sixteenth century. Of the seventeenth century is a beautiful flattened ewer of very pleasing contour, its body carved with a rich naturalistic pattern of stem, leaf and flower, while its handle, though retaining the horizontal and vertical lines, is of most graceful shape. There are vases, cups and covers, and one tiny wine vessel resembling a doll's teapot, in pure white jade with dashes of emerald dying into the white. Figures of immortals and children are fashioned wholly from the purest emerald jade—of great translucency—the most valued colour of all. Smaller objects, and daintily carved, there are, of many lustrous hues that have been described as the "quintessence of creation forged from the rainbow."

A collection of arms and armour, the property of a gentleman, will be dispersed by Messrs. Christie on April 17th. There are two complete suits of armour, and several three-quarter suits, notably a fine one of Landsknecht armour of German-Swiss making of the middle of the sixteenth century, and another, equally fine, the work of a French armourer about 1630, made for a man of slim figure. In parts of armour the collection is very strong. We have a rare sixteenth century breastplate and backplate, the breastplate being of peascod form of French origin. Over the left side is a grand guard, perhaps of earlier date, which is kept in position by means of three bolts. Then there is a fine early sixteenth century breastplate of globose shape with tassets extending to the knees. It is etched with acanthus bands in the manner of Kolman of Augsburg. The tasset is bordered with embossed palm pattern and the kneecaps have heads of cherubim, below which is repeated the etched acanthus design. Another pair of laminated tassets, made for a man of large figure by a Milanese smith about 1630, is richly decorated with foliated scrolls and military trophies on granulated ground and parcel-gilt, and must have formed part of a very rich suit of fine decorative lines.

Among the helmets is a fine example of North Italian craftsmanship made about 1560 and formerly in the Thill collection. It is decorated with bands of etching of military accoutrements and trophies of arms on a granulated ground originally gilt. Another from the Eglington collection is plainer, the heavy skull is forged with a marked keel while the bevor has a marked edge at the rim. With these is a North Italian armet made about 1480, which contrasts with a German armet of about 1540, decorated with an etched border of foliation in the style of Valentine Siebenburger. Of defensive horse armour there is here a fine chanfron of Italian origin with an etched border of foliation and having a spike on an etched cartouche bearing armorials and decorated with scrolls.

From April 30th to May 11th Messrs. Sotheby will bring under the hammer the famous collection of works of art, drawings, engravings for goldsmiths, minor sculpture, including bronzes of the Renaissance, ivories and wood-carvings, astronomical instruments, ceramics, silver plate, jewellery, Italian and German medals of the Renaissance and a library of curious early publications, bookplates and autographs, which was formed by the brothers Max and Maurice Rosenheim of Hampstead, sold by order of the executors.

MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS.

Authentic relics of the ill-fated Queen will be sold by auction at Calder House, Piccadilly, on March 22nd. There is absolutely no question of the authenticity of these relics. My instructions to sell come from the family in whose possession nine of the relics have been since 1646. These nine were given to Gillies Mowbray, lady-in-waiting, who left them to her grand-daughter, Mary Gray. This lady married John Clerk. He bought lands at Penicuik, and their descendant, Sir George N. Clerk, Bart., has instructed me to sell. They consist of (1) small wooden coffer; (2) silk reticule; (3) silk handkerchief; (4) round stone-lidded box; (5) commemoration medal of Mary's betrothal to Darnley; (6) gem-set pendant with small miniature of the Queen herself, the obverse being a miniature of her son, James I.; (7) enamel and pearl pendant; (8) a gold bead necklet; (9) a lock of Prince Charlie's hair; (10) a beautiful small tortoiseshell hand-painted silk fan; (11) gold watch (a fine specimen made by Hubert, in Rouen, the spring is catgut, the outer case shagreen; (12) diamond, ruby and pearl-set pendant (called in historical records a solitaire); on the obverse appears—"Simplex appares simplicitate cares." The jewel was a present from the Dauphin of France to Mary on the eve of their marriage, and in some paintings of the Queen it is seen worn by her. This and the watch were given to Massie, one of her French attendants, who followed her to Scotland, just before her execution, and are being sold by Major Frazer Tytler, to whom they have descended.

I am always in attendance at Calder House. For a fee of 21/- my experts will call when motoring in your vicinity and point out your treasures and their probable cash values.

Valuations for probate, etc., at moderate fees.

THE HIGHEST MOTOR ROAD IN EUROPE.—II

WE motored southward from Trafoi on September 4th, endeavouring to escape from the bad weather in the mountains. We went, by Bozen and Trient, to Venice, where we spent a week, but there, too, the weather was cold and wet. Returning by Padua and Verona to Lake Como we installed ourselves in the excellent Hotel Victoria at Menaggio. Here at last the weather changed and we basked once more in the sun.

It is 120 miles to the top of the Stelvio from Menaggio (going up the Italian side), a day's run there and back in Brunhilde. We wired to Trafoi to ask if the pass was open, and when the reply came in the affirmative, we dug out our woollies and furs again and set off. Taking clothes for a night, in case we should be stranded, we left Menaggio at 9.30 on September 20th to try our luck on the Stelvio for the second time.

The road from Menaggio to the bridge at the head of the lake is narrow and filled with traffic, speed on it is impossible, and we took an hour to do the 18 miles. Imagine our consternation when we arrived at the bridge to find it under repair! The workmen told us that it would not be safe to cross over for an hour. There is no other way round, so we had to possess our souls in patience and learn that no bribe will induce an Italian workman to hurry! At 11.30 we crossed the bridge and after that we were able to make up for lost time. The road to Sondrio and Tirano is straight, with a splendid surface, and we were able to average 40 miles an hour easily. We lunched by the roadside in a lovely chestnut grove about 20 miles from Bormio.

At Tirano, the Aprica and Bernina passes branch off to right and left, and the valley, which thus far is rather uninteresting, gets narrower and more wooded and one longed to stop and photograph the enchanting little villages. The road mounts gradually all the way from Como (1,000ft.), but the actual pass begins at Bormio (4,989ft.). It is 15½ miles from there to the summit, a rise of 5,021ft., and an average of 324ft. per mile, not quite as steep as the Austrian side. Of course the whole pass is now Italian, but for convenience I use the old terminology "Austrian" and "Italian" for north and south sides respectively. The German language is still spoken on the north side and the same Tyrolese peasants inhabit it.

Bormio is a little town in a lovely hollow of the mountains, surrounded by high snow peaks. The great Piz Tresaro rears up to the south-east like a huge sugar cake, and northward the pile of the Eiswand and Monte Cristallo shut out the Ortler group behind them.

The road rises out of the town in three great curves, with acute but well constructed corners. Then it runs up a narrow defile, being cut in the side of the mountain which rises steeply up from the road on one side and falls away on the other down a sheer precipice to a small river at the bottom of the ravine.

During the past three weeks of bad weather several bad landslides and avalanches had fallen across the road and completely blocked it; these had been cleared just sufficiently to enable a car to pass on the precipice side, but it was unpleasantly narrow in such places, without an inch to spare! We passed through five long winter galleries lit by electricity, the water dripping from the roofs making the road through them very slippery. At 7,000ft. we were running on second speed and there was snow on the roadside. A huge mountain ahead appears to block the end of the defile through which the road climbs; one cannot imagine what is going to happen to the road or in what direction it can possibly continue! But apparently Austrian civil engineers were not easily daunted. A mountain 10,000ft. high blocks the way, but the road simply climbs up it, just as it does on the Austrian side.

It mounts in a series of zig-zags cut in the face of the hill. The hairpin corners are beautifully engineered and the road is amply wide with low parapets. But we had only about half the road to drive on, as the snow had been cleared from the centre and was piled up several feet deep on either side. Our chauffeur continued to reverse and go forward again on almost every corner with exquisite skill.

I simply cannot describe the grandeur of the scenery as we ascended; all round us were huge snow peaks and vast snowfields, so dazzling that we were glad to put on green glasses to protect our eyes from the glare. Our aneroid registered 8,000ft. and now only the wheel-tracks were clear of snow; it was bitterly cold and the air was like champagne. We could see the summit before us and the refuge on the top, but it looked as though we should never reach it, with the road narrowing at every yard as the snow encroached more and more towards the centre. But at 3 p.m. we rounded the last hairpin corner (our fortieth) and came to a halt on the summit, 9,041ft. Brunhilde was as cool as the snow!

The first thing that met our eyes on the top was another Rolls-Royce! Her driver was an Englishman and he had a party of Italians with him. We congratulated each other, took photographs and conversed (in our execrable Italian) with the soldiers on duty guarding the pass. They were engaged in clearing up all the debris of war; the network of trenches and earthworks was only partially concealed by the snow.

We could only gasp with wonder at the views around us! Our stock of superlatives had given out on the way up. The vast snowy mass of the Ortler to the north-east, northward the mountains of Austria, and westward the peaks of the Engadine formed a magnificent panorama. There was much more snow on the top than we had expected, so we did not think it would be prudent to linger on the pass in case the weather changed and we should be stranded for weeks, so we decided to hurry down to Franzenshohe for some tea before our long drive back.

The other driver politely moved his car to one side to let us pass and in so doing got firmly embedded in the snow, and our chauffeur had to go to the rescue with ropes and chains. By the time we had

Beauty, Utility and Economy

AN eye for beauty, a taste for utility, and a desire for economy are all gratified by Beatonson bodies. Lady motorists especially are charmed with their elegance. They are so simple to operate too, and being of much lighter build than the ordinary body they save on petrol and tyres. And they cost less in the first place. Yet they are much stronger, more comfortable, absolutely rattle proof and last longer. The reason is the exclusive Beatonson Patent All Metal Headwork Construction which must be seen before its advantages can be realised. A motor-car discovery: the perfectly-balanced 'four'

The harmonic balancer invented by Dr. F. W. Lanchester, F.R.S., M.Inst.C.E., gives the 23-60 h.p. Vauxhall engine of four cylinders the same balance, and consequently the same smoothness of running, as if it had six cylinders. Cost is saved and there are fewer potential sources of trouble. In this ingenious device British inventiveness has achieved a notable advance in motor-car design. "This is really an extraordinarily cheap car," writes Mr. H. Massac Buist, after a trial of the 23-60 h.p. Vauxhall 'Kington' touring car, "in face of its quality and performance."

extricated him from his drift his party were ready to go on, so he led the way down the pass. We followed closely. The descent is very steep and the hairpin corners very acute, but the road is beautifully wide when clear of snow, and, of course, it is always much more alarming to go down a steep pass than to go up one. We were very pleased when we managed to get round several corners without reversing, while the car in front had to, in spite of the fact that our wheelbase was 6ins. longer than his. It is here that expert driving counts. The driver of the Rolls-Royce in front of us ran blithely down in third speed (instead of in second, as we did), emitting volumes of smoke and smell from his brakes—a dangerous proceeding! His brakes would not have served him over nineteen passes without a repair depot, as ours did. At Franzenshohe they told us that the pass had been opened for the first time that day since our adventure three weeks before, and that it would be closed for the season with the next snowfall.

We started back to Menaggio at 4.30 p.m., 120 miles over the pass again and round the now familiar corners. The evening shadows were chasing each other across the snowfields, and the sun was sinking fast behind the Engadine peaks. We longed to take more photographs, but dared not dawdle on the summit with forty hairpin corners before us on the way down, which we had no inclination to manœuvre in the dark. A mile below the summit we encountered a small Fiat coming up; it was impossible to pass each other because of the snow, so we had to reverse until we came to a side clearance on a corner that we could pull into. After this we did wonders, swinging round corners and tearing through tunnels with great dash and style.

IN THE SNOW.

The mountain tops all crimson in the afterglow of the sunset and the deep purple shadows in the valley were all soon merged into black night that falls so suddenly in these parts. Nestling into our furs we sped home through the darkness. We only took one wrong turning, which was soon rectified, and arrived back at our hotel at Menaggio at 8.30 p.m.

We had been 240 miles to an altitude of 9,041ft. and had crossed the Stelvio twice in one day. A. CHAPMAN.

DELIVERY "TUNE"

THIS little note is going to be a very vigorous grumble, and so it behoves one to keep to the point but get it over as gently as possible. Perhaps it would be wisest to omit it altogether, but that would not be entirely fair, and a good grumble may have a beneficial effect somewhere. The subject is the condition in which cars are delivered to the customer or his agent from the manufacturer.

An isolated instance of a car sent out from the factory and handed over to the customer incomplete in one or two details, or perhaps inferior or unduly hurried in the fitting of one or two accessories, means nothing. Such cases are only to be expected, and it would indeed be remarkable if factory organisation could be brought to such a pitch and the human element so far reduced that every one of the hundred or so cars leaving a factory in the course of a week should be absolutely perfect in every detail. That is an ideal for which we may hope rather than expect. But the other extreme came to my notice recently, and it can only be described as disgraceful carelessness on the part of an of an old member of the British motor industry.

Fortunately there are two cases happening within a week or so of each other, so that there can be no extenuating excuse put forward that either was an isolated case. As one of the two was my own, I am fairly well acquainted with all the details of it. As the other was that of a friend who had ordered his car of this make on my recommendation, and as I had conducted many of the negotiations for him, I also know the details of this case practically as well as those of my own.

Let us take the friend's case first. His car was ordered, together with certain accessories, and delivery was promised for about three weeks later. About five weeks later, no car being available, and no signs of its coming being apparent, certain machinery was put in motion to accelerate the desired event. Metaphorically speaking, the car came tearing up to the customer's door in a very short time, having been apparently thrust out of the works and to the customer's house by some awful explosive force. But, although the licence for the car had been ordered in the ordinary way, and though several accessories were also to be fitted, the car came unashamed and innocent of all trappings—in a state of nature, one might say. It is not as though the omissions were of merely ill-considered trifles. A licence and a speedometer are things of consequence, as also is a two-way petrol tap when it is saving you from being stranded miles from nowhere on a pouring wet night. To cut a long story short, these various omissions are still waiting for attention, with the exception of the licence, which was wrung out of the makers almost by threats. Some three weeks have elapsed since the car was delivered and the owner has only his inexperienced judgment to guide him in observing the maker's instructions that for some 250 miles the speed of the car should not be allowed to exceed 25 m.p.h.

The other case is more serious. Here, the car was ordered some five months ago and was duly prepared for delivery. But then the designer, who happens to be a personal acquaintance, suggested that as certain modifications in design were about to be made, it might be worth while waiting till they could be incorporated in the car—an excellent suggestion eagerly accepted. And then came the time, some three months later, when delivery was wanted. It was two months after that before the car was alleged to be ready! And what did ready mean? When taken over it was shabby, with unmistakable signs of having been through much hard service, there were two or three inches of back-lash in its steering, its lamps were set so as to throw their beams on to the road about twenty yards in front of the car, instead of practically horizontally, the gear lever caught against the body-work—this applied to both cars, by the way—the control pedals were so long that they could only be worked at the expense of prolonged cramp in the feet, the interior of the car was dirty, mostly with oil, one of the side curtains was cracked, the tool kit consisted of a broken tyre pump, parts of a cheap American adjustable spanner, a broken petrol funnel, a damaged oil-can, a brace, jack and fixed spanner, all much the worse for wear! Finally, the engine performance was "dud," the dynamo belt wanted tightening, and the electric wiring was so arranged that the adjustment was impossible of access!

Now, as I have said, if these were isolated instances, there would be no point or justification in dwelling on them. Unfortunately they are not, but I take them as my text because they are recent and because I am familiar with all the details. The British manufacturer is fond of grumbling at the treatment he receives from potential customers and at the favour some of them show towards the foreign maker. Is there not here some explanation of his dissatisfaction, and does it not suggest that, on occasion at least, the dissatisfaction of the customer is far more justifiable than that of the maker?

A couple of years ago I took delivery of a car of which the general finish and paintwork were so bad that before I could sell the car a few months later it had to be entirely repainted!

I mention no names, because the carelessness and the almost dishonest indifference to the welfare of the customer that are chronicled are not the monopoly of any one firm. Will all offenders please note?

Quite as interesting is the quality of instruction books that are supplied with many cars, that accompanying the two cars previously referred to above being an excellent case in point. This book is so badly produced and written that not only is it unintelligible to the layman, but two highly qualified and experienced technical men have declared that they cannot understand it, and one of the maker's own servants in his London showroom has admitted his inability to follow the book and to discover several of the components of the car which, according to the book, require periodical attention! This may

As an owner aptly put it, "the Crossley 19.6 is the four which makes the six unnecessary." Certainly its road performance is remarkable, even for a modern car.

Everything about the car speaks of quality, and the chassis with its clean design and perfect construction is a triumph of engineering. Yet the price is strictly moderate and the five-seater Touring car at £795 is unequalled value.

12/14 H.P.

A high grade car, economical in first cost and in upkeep. Easily attains over 50 miles per hour and climbs any ordinary hill on top. Engine extremely lively; clutch silky; fuel consumption compares very favourably with any other car in its class.

sound far-fetched and incomprehensible, but, actually, it is a mere statement of fact. I am told that American instruction books are very well produced and are really useful to anyone who can understand the language. Some of our British manufacturers produce instruction books that give no room for unfavourable criticism, but it so happens that nearly all of these are turned out by makers of expensive cars, the owners of which may reasonably be expected to employ chauffeurs and so have little need of instruction. If the maker turns out a book that no one can follow, who is to blame when trouble develops with the car because the owner-driver has failed to observe the instructions that he cannot understand? X.

Economy in Motoring

ECONOMY, given first place among subjects of special interest in the automobile world, has, without this arbitrary distinction, its own ways of claiming attention. Experience that is stern rather than pleasant teaches us this, and the word itself is too apt to call up images that are drab and dreary, devoid of all pleasurable excitement and associated with desires doomed to remain for ever unfulfilled.

But this is largely unjust in so far as economy relates to motoring alone. Suppose, for instance, that a certain distance, say 5,000 miles, has to be covered in a certain time, say a year, there is endless interest and amusement in thinking out ways and means of reducing the cost of that mileage. This is the bright and intriguing aspect of economy, fraught with possibilities for the future, a game of skill in which a certain definite amount of motoring is allowed to take as little money from one as possible.

Does skilful economy on the part of individual motorists affect the industry in general for better or for worse? The question is not really much of an economic poser. It would seem at first sight that if cars in general are made to last ten years instead of five that the trade as a whole can only sell half as many in a given time. But the effect of doubling the useful life of a car is to reduce the cost of motoring by a substantial percentage. Similarly, any and every invention that reduces running costs helps to bring motoring within the scope of a wider and wider circle of people. The less anything costs, no matter whether it relates to utility, luxury or passing pleasure, the greater the profit that is liable to be made out of it. More money has been made out of beer than champagne, out of third than first class railway fares, out of cinemas than grand opera, out of coal than diamonds, out of cod than caviar. The examples illustrating this point of view are innumerable, and the inference is obvious, backed up by all human experience that the less motoring costs the greater will be the harvest the industry will reap.

Probably this point of view is better understood now than it has been in the past, for competition is keen among manufacturers to produce the most economical vehicle. If any designer could knock a definite 20 per cent. off the cost of running any car that was already good the reward which ought to go to him would be great indeed.

Fuel consumption is a vital question. So long as heat engines in any form hold the field, fuel must be consumed to get power for the road wheels. The march of science is rapid at the present time, and notions which have seemed fantastic and visionary show signs of coming within the range of practical possibility. For instance, the transmission and distribution of electric power by "wireless" is spoken of by quite serious and learned people as something which the future may bring forth. However that may be, the power would still have to be generated and presumably paid for pro rata by the motorist.

But to come down to the ordinary carburettors with which the motoring economist of the present day has to cope; some of them are really not bad at all, and, although probably more new (?) patents are filed each year on carburettors than on any other subject, the best existing instruments do not allow the large amount of room for further improvement that the files of the Patent Office would seem to imply. This statement needs little explanation, for it is rash to say that anything in this world is perfect, or even nearly so; but there are profound mathematical reasons why it is impossible to convert more than a certain percentage of the heat energy in the fuel burned into useful mechanical work. A rough and ready estimate of the disposal of this energy in an efficient internal combustion engine is 30 per cent. mechanical work, or indicated horse power, 30 per cent. loss to the cooling jackets, 30 per cent. loss to the exhaust and 10 per cent. in mechanical friction, though in the majority of automobile engines the percentage of heat energy actually converted into work is undoubtedly lower than 30 per cent. Yet this does not mean that the principles on which the automobile engine works are fundamentally wrong, rather the contrary, for all things are comparative, and a quite good steam engine converts only some 10 per cent. of the heat energy of its fuel into work.

There is, therefore, still room for economy in fuel consumption, though perhaps not quite so much as some credulous people might be led to believe by perusing advertisements of devices intended to make your car run more economically.

Some epoch-making invention may yet arise which will make an inroad on one or other of those lost percentages mentioned above; but such an invention is not likely, in the writer's opinion, to come in the matter of carburettor development. The carburettor is an ingenious contrivance for preparing the fuel for combustion, and it does it very well. It is rather in regard to what happens during and after combustion that we must look for the exercise of inventive ingenuity to bring about a substantial reduction of the losses. The principle of compounding, of making the exhaust gases continue to do work in their expansion down to a much lower pressure and temperature than that at which they are at present rejected, appears to hold out possibilities for useful and interesting research; also to minimise the heat losses to the cooling jackets by means of improved combustion chambers, non-conducting layers and so forth, gives our technicians a fine opportunity for clever and judicious steering between Scylla and Charybdis, to prevent the heat from getting out and to prevent it also from making itself objectionable by being kept in.

New Lanchester Service Depot

A VERY welcome sign of the times is the increasing attention paid by manufacturers to the welfare of customers living far from the factory where a car is made. Service depots where spares may be obtained for and repairs executed to cars that for any reason cannot be sent to the factory are being instituted in many large towns, and London is, of course, taking the lead in this respect. Naturally, all our first-class makers have had their depots in London for a long time, but it is only within the last year or so that the smaller firms have followed this excellent and imperative lead.

Until recently the Lanchester Motor Company, Limited, have had for some years, in addition to the showrooms in New Bond Street, a repair and service establishment in Pimlico, but this latter has now been transferred to much more convenient and larger premises in Star Road, West Kensington. The new premises are very spacious, and are amply equipped to deal with all kinds of repair work, and it may interest owners of other makes of cars to know that their vehicles can be attended to at Star Road under Lanchester supervision and with Lanchester standards of workmanship. Intended primarily for the convenience of Lanchester owners in or around London, the depot contains a complete stock of Lanchester spares and is manned by men who really know and understand the Lanchester car, so that the service rendered will be not only superior, but more intelligently directed than that which might be expected from an ordinary garage. Besides the actual working part of the premises there are a pleasant suite of offices, a comfortable chauffeurs' room and consulting room and a mess room for the staff. Of course, all ordinary requirements, such as petrol and oil, can be satisfied, and special attention has been devoted to securing the speedy execution of repair work.

THE MARCONI COMPANY CONDUCTS SUCCESSFUL WIRELESS EXPERIMENTS AT JUNIOR CAR CLUB'S OPENING RALLY

FOR some considerable time the Marconi Company have perfected their wireless receiving set for large cars. Everyone who has had the opportunity of "listening in" on the Daimler saloons which have been thus equipped have been unanimous in stating that the reception is almost perfect. One of these cars was present for demonstration purposes at the Opening Rally of the Junior Car Club held last Saturday week at Burford Bridge Hotel, when many members of the Club took advantage of the opportunity of "listening in" while travelling at speed and the results were excellent in every way, the broadcasting from 2 L O being received quite well. By arrangement with Wireless Equipment, Limited, 2 O M very kindly gave two special transmissions.

For the first time on record the car's wireless set was used in conjunction with a large size Amplion loud speaker. The latter was placed in the big dining-room of the hotel and it was connected up with the receiving set on the car, which remained stationary outside. The opera "Polly" came through perfectly and the volume of sound was more than ample for the large room. The Marconi Company are to be congratulated on the success of this experiment, particularly as this was the first occasion on which they had attempted it.

SCARVES ON EVERYTHING

THE THREE-PIECE SUIT. EGYPTIAN PATTERNED MATERIALS.

DRESS displays still continue to fill the horizon, and the zeal with which they are attended testifies to the appreciation of this pleasant way of acquiring a general impression of what is to be worn. There is no possible question now as to the slim line to be observed in day gowns and costumes, although many of the advance summer models of organdie and voile hint at frills and furbelows and bouffant effects, while the hipped evening frocks for young girls continue to make a steady bid for favour. At the moment, however, the majority of women are mainly concentrating on three-piece suits and afternoon gowns, with a useful classical type of coat and skirt thrown in for practical service, and in all and sundry the scarf plays a significant rôle, as also the kerchief, quaint little hankies of flowered chiffon being tied round one wrist.

In the case of an evening dress of Madonna blue marocain embroidered in silver there was introduced a long, narrow end of silver and blue brocade slung on from the waist that could be worn as a short side train or flung over the shoulder and round the neck. Short Quaker-like capes are mounted on deep yoke pieces that resolve in front into long scarf ends.

The three-piece may either be completed by a coat or a cape, though it seems to be unanimously agreed that the upper part shall be of a contrasting and preferably patterned material or else of a transparency in tone. Older women are, perhaps, better advised to keep their three-piece in one colour, as a contrast is rather apt to accentuate the figure and also cut it up. Self-toned Georgette or crêpe de Chine can be rendered very charming with embroideries of silk or silk braid, while quite the most successful models for pronounced forms have this transparent upper part drawn into a deep shaped belt of the heavier fabric, the latter serving the two ends of keeping the fragile top firm and in place and forming a connecting link with the skirt; whereas a slim figure, whether youthful or verging on middle age, may safely indulge in a contrasting top, for which there are a perfect host of fascinating stuffs in silk and wool marocain, silk and cotton crêpes and printed silks.

The craze for Paisley continues, but failing to be able to produce the soft mellowed tints of a real old Paisley shawl, the manufacturers are taking liberties of their own alike in patterns and colours and, incidentally, proving uncommonly successful. But my personal prediction with regard to Paisley effects is that they will be short lived, since they are up against such a number of rivals in the guise of hand embroideries. At one house of exclusive fame the majority of the short coats are lavishly embroidered, particularly at the back and up the back of the sleeves from the wrist. In some instances there is almost as much embroidery as material to be seen. But these, of course, run into money, and a considerable amount, as they are hand-wrought by specially trained experts.

Again, there is the more habillé three-piece expressed in plain and figured silk crêpe, broché, and that effective blistered or wrung satin, so called as the crinkled surface suggests that it has been wetted and just wrung out. And this, strange to relate, builds the most satisfactory coats and skirts, the material being malleable enough for a draped or gathered skirt and sufficiently firm to make a coat—a loose négligé affair anyway, after the style of the example depicted in the adjoined original model. Equally so the satin broché actually used for this three-piece. To be initially noted is the skirt, ankle length and with all the fulness congregated in front, where it is kept flat and in place at the top by a clever wing-like ornament made of flat kilted ribbon. It is a charming jupe and one in nowise exaggerated, so that it is really suitable to any age.

The double width in which most of the silks are now woven allows of the short, loose jacket being cut en magyar, a wide flange or volant carrying the sleeves almost to the wrists. Finally, there is the scarf, which may be slung over one shoulder or permitted to hang down one side, as taste and the weather dictate, since this actually starts as a collar and then gradually widens out into one long scarf end, and, like the coat, it is lined with the figured fabric employed for the soft little bodice. On the seated figure the latter is seen to its full perfection, expressed in one of the modish silk white crêpes patterned over with an Egyptian design in black. The sleeve introduced is among the latest fancies, albeit a revival from the early 'fifties. To acquire the bouffant appearance at the base there is used a slotted elastic, and I am told it is quite one of the most comfortable voluminous sleeves to wear imaginable, assisting, moreover, in this particular instance to fill up the wide vacuum left by the flange sleeve in the coat. A propos of the latter, a decidedly alluring suggestion is to line such wide bell shapes with rows of narrow ivory-coloured lace, which in the case of a frock would be repeated in the guise of a deep berthe collar. A demure, almost puritanic gown seen of snuff brown wool marocain that was simply girdled low about the waist rested its success on these lace-lined sleeves and berthe collar.

FROM THE EDITOR'S BOOKSHELF

At Half-past Eight, by James Agate. (Jonathan Cape, 7s. 6d.)

IT is impossible not to like Mr. Agate, for his dramatic criticisms (of which this is a selection for 1921–22) are honest, virile and kindly. Moreover, Mr. Agate has consistently tried to give thumbnail sketches of actors and actresses which may be of use to posterity as Lamb's and Hazlitt's sketches are to us. He assures us that he has to this end, holding that transmission to posterity can only be achieved through beauty, "put into each essay the utmost urgency and thrust for beauty." But though I have frequently seen the artists referred to, only one of his pictures remains in my mind, and that, curiously enough, of the only actress he describes whom I have not seen—Marie Lloyd. That is a very just and living appreciation of that irreplaceable artist. But as to the "beauty" of the essays, one doubts whether ever so much urgency or thrust will ever produce beauty, They are excellent criticisms, as we said, but beauty has eluded Mr. Agate—as she has many a worse man.—H.

The Briary Bush, by Floyd Dell. (Heinemann, 7s. 6d.)

FELIX FAY, the naïve yet brilliant young man about whom Mr. Dell has raised his Briary Bush, is the principal character also, I believe, of a previous book, called "Moon-Calf," which I have somehow missed. Fortunately, the latest instalment of the history of this very fortunate youth—who went to Chicago intent on battling his way to fame and fortune and almost at once found his feet set upon most pleasant paths of journalism, dramatic criticism and playwrightship leading to his goal—is perfectly easy to follow, even if you have no acquaintance with its forerunner. Very early in his Chicago days Felix meets with Rose-Ann, and before very long he has married her, and Mr. Dell devotes himself to giving us a picture of their married life and misunderstandings. Rose-Ann is an impulsive, eager creature whose development has been fast in one direction and slow in the other, so that she is too lop-sided in her views for happy marriage, and Felix is much too undecided himself to influence her for their good. By the end they have both suffered enough and grown enough to realise that the only happy marriages are those real ones which mean homes. It seems an old fashioned moral to find at the end of all their artistic excesses, after Rose-Ann's frank discussions and Felix's dramatic changes of mood, but it rather served, like sugar at the bottom of a teacup, to sweeten in retrospect a draught which at one time I felt a little disinclined to swallow. It is certainly a clever novel and not too American—it comes in Messrs. Heinemann's "Atlantic Library"—to be enjoyed by English readers.—S.

The Lunatic Still at Large, by J. Storer Clouston. (Nash and Grayson, 7s. 6d.)

THE invention of the telephone was a cruel blow to authors whose characters used to chase one another, with ever-changing adventures, from flyleaf to finis of a book. For nowadays the whole country can be set on the qui vive by telephone; soon broadcasting may add yet another obstacle to the kind of adventures with which Sherlock Holmes and, in the Lunatic books, Mr. Mandell-Essington delight us. However, the lunatic is still at large in the late 'nineties and, by avoiding telegraph offices, free to do as he likes. Free? Well, there is a sleuth on his track and a young lady in his heart and, of course, all sorts of complications. This time Mr. Essington finds himself one of three candidates for the post of long-lost nephew and heir to a wealthy gentleman, which, however, he misses. On the other hand, he also misses, but only just, the less welcome efforts of the sleuth to bring him back to his asylum; so that we may look forward to another chapter of adventures. Mr. Storer Clouston, however, should not let his hero stay so long in one place. The pace of this book is much slower than that of its predecessors.

Miss Mannering, by Pett Ridge. (Methuen, 7s. 6d.)

MR. PETT RIDGE has a dear little talent and the kindest outlook upon life and subscribes with all his heart to the old fairytale tag—

> "But the wicked shall be punished (not too severely),
> And the good shall happy be."

And in some moods he might prove aggravating, but generally the effect of his pedestrian optimism is very pleasant. Miss Mannering is a very capable young lady who comes as an assistant in the kitchen to a city restaurant and leaves after not too many brisk, honest, cheerful years as its proprietor. Told in a composed, quick style of Mr. Pett Ridge's own, her ways of surmounting difficulties and meeting temptations seem almost too easily successful; but there are some very good character sketches, done with a few clear strokes, which prove him now, as always, a master in his own field.

SOME BOOKS OF THE DAY.

Two books on Tennyson—is this a sign of a reaction against the vers librist and his ways and works?—have made their appearance within a few days. One is Mr. Hugh L'Anson Fausset's Tennyson: A Modern Portrait (Selwyn and Blount, 8s. 6d.); the other, Tennyson (Constable, 12s. 6d.), by Mr. Harold Nicholson, and both merit full consideration, which shall be given presently. Biography is certainly the accentuated note among books of the moment, for they include the life of that well known American woman of letters, Louise Imogen Guiney (Macmillan, 15s.), by E. M. Tenison; Mr. Coulson Kernahan's Celebrities: Little Stories About Famous Folk (Hutchinson, 16s.); and The Melody of God (Constable, 15s.), which includes biographical matter in an appreciation of the Empress Eugénie and in one or two beautiful little memoirs of soldier friends. Famous Poison Trials (Collins, 7s. 6d.), by Mr. Harold Eaton, I hesitate to include in this category. In Curious Survivals (Jenkins, 12s. 6d.) Dr. George C. Williamson has exploited the happy idea of describing many of the customs, such as the Maundy money distribution, "fairs and courts of pie-powder" and so on, which have survived into our practical—or would-be practical—era, including curious words and habits in daily life.

Books with a travel bias include Mr. Douglas Freshfield's pleasant volume, Behind the Snow Line (Constable, 18s.); The Happy Traveller (Methuen, 7s. 6d.), a record of journeys in many lands in the more interesting fashion which does not demand a full purse; Jersey: An Isle of Romance (T. Fisher Unwin, 10s. 6d.), a really charming volume by Miss Blanche B. Elliot; Into the East (Macmillan, 10s. 6d.), notes on travels in Burma and Malaya, by Mr. Richard Curle, of whom Mr. Conrad in a foreword says "he seems to have captured for us the spirit of modern travel itself"; and Penzance and the Land's End District (Homeland Association, 1s. 6d.), a very useful little guide to a lonely district Fiction received during the last week includes Eleanor of the Loft (Cape, 7s. 6d.), by Grace Rhys (Mrs. Ernest Rhys), a story with a very attractive beginning in the schoolroom days of the heroine; Ouest of Youth (Hutchinson, 7s. 6d.), by Mr. J. G. Sarasin; Last Week (Collins, 7s. 6d.), by Miss Nora Vines; The Cow that Jumped Over the Moon (Phillip Allan, 7s. 6d.), a story with a strong flavour of countryside life by Mr. J. B. Morton; and three stories by Mr. D. H. Lawrence, The Ladybird (Secker, 7s. 6d.), "The Fox" and "The Captain's Doll," bound together under the title of the former. Reprints include Mr. Michael Sadleir's successful first novel, Privilege (Constable, 3s. 6d.), and two volumes in the complete edition of Henry James' works which Messrs. Macmillan are producing, Lord Beaupré and The Last of the Valerii (7s. 6d. each).

The Mad Minstrel (T. Fisher Unwin, 4s. 6d.) is a volume of somewhat lurid poems by Mr. Robert Watson.

Mr. H. J. Powell's long-expected Glass-making in England (Cambridge University Press, 25s.) shall have further mention in an early issue. The House We Ought to Live In (Duckworth, 7s. 6d.), by Mr. John Gloag and Mr. Leslie Mansfield, so well deserves its title that it will read like a fairy tale to the many who cannot find a house to live in of any sort.

Classification breaks down before my three remaining books, Heredity in Poultry (Macmillan, 10s.), by Mr. Reginald Crundell Punnett, to which I shall hope to see further space devoted; Auction Bridge Commonsense (Routledge, 2s. 6d.), by Dr. J. W. F. Gillies; and Bowling (A. and C. Black, 3s. 6d.), by Mr. J. A. Manson, a third edition.

COMFORT—and the Sportswoman

Perspiration is a source of much discomfort and inconvenience to most active women, and when the perspiration is excessive the discomfort is apt to assume a most distressing form.

POUDRE DE SANTÉ regularly used provides a perfect and healthful remedy. It is a delightful toilet powder, which exercises a corrective effect on the secretion of the sweat glands without hindering in any way the normal healthy action of the skin, and it gives its users complete immunity from every discomfort and unpleasantness to which perspiration can give rise. The longest round, the closest-fought tennis match, the hottest dance will not disturb the bodily coolness and freshness of the woman who uses Poudre de Sante regularly. It is a boon to the sportswoman, and a necessity in the tropics.

EASTER RAILWAY ARRANGEMENTS

" Loveliest of trees, the cherry now
Is hung with bloom along the bough,
And stands about the woodland ride
Wearing white for Eastertide."

The question of where to spend the Easter holidays depends to a certain extent on the arrangements made by the railway companies, but the welcome break of seaside or country after winter in town recommends itself to everyone. The railway companies, anticipating much Easter travel, have made extensive arrangements for the benefit of their passengers, to which more particular reference must be made.

The Great Western Railway Company announces special facilities all over its system. On the days immediately preceding Good Friday, many expresses will run in two or more parts to provide for the comfort of extra passengers. On Thursday, March 29th, excursions will run from Paddington Station to the principal towns, coast and inland resorts and spas in Devon, Cornwall, Somerset, Dorset, the Channel Islands, North, South and Central Wales, the Cambrian Coast, the Wye, Thames and Severn Valleys, the Midlands and Ireland. This Easter, fares will be lower than those of last Easter by about one-seventh, a fare of 35s. last Easter becoming one of 30s. this year, and so on. The usual week-end tickets will be extended for the holiday period, and here again the fares are substantially lower than last year, particularly in the case of first-class week-end fares.

Arrangements on a large scale are being made by the London, Midland and Scottish Railway Company, which is issuing two comprehensive Easter excursion programmes from Euston and St. Pancras stations respectively. From Euston the first excursion will leave for Ireland at 7.0 p.m. on Wednesday, March 28th, with cheap bookings for fifteen days to Greenore, Dundalk, Newry, etc. On Thursday, March 29th, special trains will leave Euston for South and Central Wales, Blackpool, Southport, and the Lake District, and all important places on the Company's lines ; to Belfast and the North of Ireland vio Fleetwood and via Liverpool, and to Holyhead for Dublin ; to Perth, Dundee, Aberdeen, Inverness and the Highlands of Scotland ; also to Belfast via Stranraer. From St. Pancras many trains will be run on Thursday, March 29th, for the principal North Midland towns and health resorts, Manchester, Liverpool, Southport, Buxton, Matlock, Derby, etc. ; to Belfast (available for returning any day within fifteen days) ; to Glasgow, Ayr, Stranraer, Edinburgh, St. Andrews, Fort William and other places. Excursion tickets issued on Thursday, March 29th, to stations in England and Wales will be available for five, six, eight, ten or fifteen days ; and tickets for Scotland will be available for five, six, nine or fifteen days. As the ordinary fares have been reduced by one-seventh since last Easter, the period excursion fares this year will be proportionately reduced, the minimum fare now being 5s. as against 10s. last year. A wide selection of bookings will be given from the Company's stations in the provinces, covering different periods, to various towns and holiday resorts, including London and the South Coast, the Eastern Counties, West of England, Lancashire, Yorkshire, the Lake District and Scotland. Excursion tickets issued on Thursday, March 29th, to stations in England and Wales will be available for five, six, eight or fifteen days ; and tickets for Scotland will be available for five, six, nine or fifteen days. All excursion tickets to Ireland will be available for fifteen days. Week-end tickets issued on Friday, March 30th, and Saturday, March 31st, will be available for return on the following Monday or Tuesday by any train, or on Sunday, April 1st (where the train service permits), by any train after 6.0 a.m.

The London and North Eastern Railway Company has arranged very many excursions for the Easter holidays in connection with which reduced fares will apply. On Thursday, March 29th, special corridor express excursions for five, six, eight, ten and fifteen days will leave King's Cross for Lancashire, Yorkshire, the Midlands, and the Norfolk district and Lincolnshire, and for Scotland. From Liverpool Street excursions for five, six, eight, ten and fifteen days will be run to Suffolk and Norfolk, Essex and Cambridgeshire ; from Marylebone to the Midlands, Lincolnshire, Yorkshire and Lancashire, and the North of England. A large number of special and relieving trains will be run in order to meet the requirements of the extra traffic. Numerous restaurant car expresses will be included in the service. Tickets will be obtainable in advance. Fisk Tyres are not better tyres because discriminating people buy them; discriminating people buy them because they are better tyres.

If you consider the advantage of higher quality—long mileage and continuous service—you will also discriminate between probability and presumption by fitting Fisk.

SOME MEMORANDA

THE GRAND NATIONAL CUP

THE Grand National Cup for this year's race, illustrated he shows figures representing Britannia and the City of Liverpool holding the body of the trophy, which is surmounted with a figure Fame. It is a worthy addi to the series of "Nationa Cups manufactured by Mes Elkington and Co., Limite of Liverpool, London a Birmingham.

THE "DENNIS" MOTOR MOWE

A really good lawn mow is an essential, and wh grounds of any size are h up, it cannot be a hand o In this connection it is intere ing to realise that twenty-e years of experience of the mo manufacturing industry h gone to the manufacture the Dennis motor lawn mow It has a 4 h.p. 4 stroke engi easier to start and more sile than the usual run of engi fitted to motor mowers, speed is regulated by a sim lever, and it is able to travel as low a speed as two miles hour, or much faster th anyone can walk, while it able to mount a gradient of o in six. The differential enabl the machine to be guid round the most awkw corners, and it can, in fa turn in either direction on own ground. It can also used as a roller when cutting is not required. As compared with t horse mower, the "Dennis," with one man to guide it, will do 3½ hours what it takes a horse and two men seven hours, or two m eleven hours, to do.

A GREAT LABOUR-SAVER.

The O-Cedar Mop has now become a regular feature of ev well ordered home and is probably better known than any other pr prietary article of household equipment. Like other household instruments, such as brooms and brushes, these mops wear out, a it is good to note that renewals can be obtained at a lower price th ever before. The latest O-Cedar specialty is the O-Cedar Wax, wh the manufacturers claim dries like varnish and is of equal brilliancy.

ELECTRIC LIGHTING FOR THE COUNTRY HOUSE.

Now that there are compact little plants which can be installed an outhouse or elsewhere, no country house need be without its elect light. There is a wide choice among these plants, but one which especially to be recommended is the "Aster British Light." Its desi is the result of many years' experience, every point in its construct and running having been carefully studied by the makers, The As Engineering Company (1913), Limited, of Wembley, Middlese It is a British made plant, comprising a dynamo driven by a little engi that runs on ordinary paraffin or petrol, with a battery of cells mount complete on a stand. The output is 750 watts, at a standard volta of 25, and the plant gives sufficient current to maintain a total of fi 30 c.p. half-watt lamps; or the battery itself, when fully charged, w maintain thirty lights for ten hours continuously. "Aster British Light is a semi-automatic plant. To start it, all you have to do is to press button. The dynamo is thereby set in operation, and when the batte has been fully charged the engine automatically stops. The plant thus virtually looks after itself. For a house of moderate size the cost for fuel is about half-a-crown a week, and the plant itself is not expensive—£127 10s. complete with battery. It is an air-cooled plant, the fly-wheel embodying the principles of an exhauster fan. A development of the same set is the "Asterlite Minor" (water-cooled); a further development being the plant called "Asterlite," of 2 k.w. capacity; and there are still larger plants to suit every need. There is no doubt that these plants are a positive boon for the country house, being thoroughly reliable in use, and needing very little attention—such, indeed, as a gardener or any handyman can give; and when one remembers that, in addition to lighting, electricity can be used for a variety of labour-saving purposes, such as vacuum cleaning, clothes washing, etc., there is all the more reason why its use is to be commended.

English Homes

PERIOD 3.

Late Tudor and Early Stuart (1558-1649).

By H. AVRAY TIPPING, M.A., F.S.A.

Nearly 500 superb illustrations and plans 63/- net.; by post 2/- extra.

THIS volume illustrates the third period of our Domestic Architecture which includes the reign of Elizabeth and the first two Stuarts. In many respects this is the most beautiful and informative volume in this great work on our Historic Homes which will, when complete, so systematically and fully set forth and illustrate the entire history of English Domestic Architecture and Home Life that it will, most assuredly, form a primary and essential item in every library of reference, great or small, public or private, worthily taking its place beside such great national works as Murray's Dictionary of the English Language, and the Dictionary of National Biography.

A special illustrated prospectus of this work will be sent, post free, on application to the Manager, "Country Life," Ltd., 20, Tavistock Street, Covent Garden, W.C.2.

NOW READY.

The Architecture of Robert & James Adam

(1758-1794.)

By ARTHUR T. BOLTON, F.S.A., F.R.I.B.A.

In two large folio volumes, containing about 700 superb illustrations, plans and drawings, £8 8 0 net.

THIS important work, which has been in preparation since 1913, forms a complete survey of the Architecture, Decoration and Furniture of the famous Adelphi Brethren, and constitutes a monumental record of the Adam style. Four generations have passed since the death of Robert Adam, yet his work has lost none of its attraction; and the esteem in which it is held to-day is even higher than at the zenith of his career. Although during the Greek and Gothic Revivals Adam architecture was freely destroyed, there still remains, as these volumes prove, a marvellous wealth of work, much of which is complete with the actual Furniture, Carpets and Hangings made to his designs. No country in the world can show equivalent instances of such historical preservation as are illustrated in these magnificent volumes.

A special prospectus of this work will be sent post free on application to the Manager, "Country Life," Ltd., 20, Tavistock Street, Covent Garden, W.C. 2.

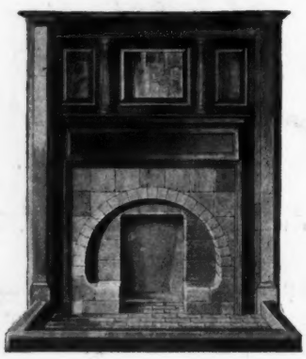
THE "DEVON" FIRE



IT IS NOT NECESSARY TO BUILD A NEW HOUSE merely because you want to have Devon fires throughout your home. Scrap your present grates. It is a simple matter to fit DEVON FIRES in their place.

There are SIX EXCELLENT REASONS for doing so: Economy, Appearance, Construction, Labour-Saving, Little Smoke, Easy Fitting. We can only give a full explanation here of one of these reasons. If you are interested in the other five ask your local ironmonger. He is probably a "Devon" Fire enthusiast and will tell you all about them.

Reason No. 6.—EASY FITTING.
The fitting of a "Devon" Fire is simple and inexpensive. It is constructed and designed to fit the standard fire opening. Your local builder can fit a "Devon" Fire in place of your old grate with very little trouble, and you will have the benefit of cosy fires and reduced coal bills. Full instructions and drawings are sent with each Fire.

—for a good night

HEALTH is based upon the foundation of untrammelled rest, when bodily activity and conscious mental effort ceases, and brain and nerve centres recuperate vital force for another day. Medical research, the art of the designer, and the skill of the engineer have been embodied in Hoskins mattresses. Never before has sleep meant so much in the way of perfect relaxation, the giving of new health and vitality, and the joy of life, as that sleep gained upon Hoskins springs, which keep the sleeper always level, straight, and in correct position. Get the most out of life by getting the most out of sleep. The Hoskins "Silver Spring Mattress" illustrated above is made of deep, lively, silver white coil springs, which mould themselves to every contour of the body, never tire, never sag, but cradle the whole body for soothing relaxation. Price £6 15s.

The Hoskins' "Silent Night Mattress"—another popular model—is made of long flexible steel slats and coil springs giving perfect suspension laterally, as well as from head to foot. - - - Price £5 15s.

COMFORT—and the Sportswoman

Perspiration is a source of much discomfort and inconvenience to most active women, and when the perspiration is excessive the discomfort is apt to assume a most distressing form.

POUDRE DE SANTÉ regularly used provides a perfect and healthful remedy. It is a delightful toilet powder, which exercises a corrective effect on the secretion of the sweat glands without hindering in any way the normal healthy action of the skin, and it gives its users complete immunity from every discomfort and unpleasantness to which perspiration can give rise. The longest round, the closest-fought tennis match, the hottest dance will not disturb the bodily coolness and freshness of the woman who uses Poudre de Sante regularly. It is a boon to the sportswoman, and a necessity in the tropics.

LEADERSHIP

The FINEST CORD TYRES IN THE WORLD

THE first pneumatic tyre was Dunlop. We have experimented and improved constantly since 1888.

We did not introduce a cord motor tyre until we were satisfied it was the best that money, experience and brains could build.

We eliminated all the mistakes in other cords first and then we added Dunlop knowledge.

We grow a large percentage of our own rubber—make our own cord material from the raw cotton—make our own tools and moulds.

We know.

Therefore we state, without qualification, that for strength, beauty, durability, resilience, safety and long mileage, we make the finest Cord Tyres in the world.

The ATCO MOTOR MOWER

The most efficient Mower on Earth

ATCO owners tell us that they have run their ATCO Motor Mower throughout the entire season without needing to adjust so much as a loose nut. Such experiences bespeak perfect craftmanship in manufacture and assembly, and are evidence of the ATCO'S smooth, simple, efficient working.

The ATCO TURF CULTIVATOR (illustrated) will aerate the roots—destroy plantains, daisies, and other fleshy-leaved weeds—level turf—loosen and collect moss—make coarse grass fine. It is the only apparatus that ensures the proper upkeep of lawns, and can be affixed only to the ATCO Motor Mower. The ATCO is the only Motor Mower to which a turf cultivator can be attached.

Send for this Free Booklet. It tells how the ATCO pays for itself in a year, and offers a FREE DEMONSTRATION on your own grass.

A Few Appreciations

"The Lawn Mower which you supplied me with two years ago has just completed its second season's work without a single breakdown, and without me having to spend a penny on it."
Robert Noblett, Esq.

"I enclose two photographs taken on my lawn. The child, aged twelve, can mow the lawn quite easily. I consider the machine is excellent."
E. Liebert, Esq.

"The Atco is working perfectly. I work it myself, and find the work quite a pleasure. It is done in half the time of the old pony-mower, and the lawns have never looked as they do now."
Mrs. Dorothy Coppen.

"If I have mowing to do which otherwise would take a man and a boy with a push mower six days' hard work which I do with an 'Atco' in two days and on less than a Gallon of Petrol Mixture, it is the thing in every way."
H. Worshoff,
Gardener to—

Sport — & Sportsmen

GOLF, FISHING, HUNTING—each has its ardent devotees who swear that their favourite is king of sports. And yet what sportsman can resist the lure of the moor or mere, especially when the birds are sufficiently strong on the wing to provide real sport for even the surest shot?

There is nothing to equal the satisfaction with which one contemplates a really good day's bag, particularly if the conditions have been rather unfavourable. It is at such times that the necessity for a really good gun to back up a sure eye and steady nerve is most apparent. Sportsmen who regularly use a B.S.A. Shot Gun find that its killing possibilities are unequalled. Design, balance, weight, handling properties, trigger pulls, strength—all these have been carefully studied to give the highest efficiency.

THE ESTATE MARKET

A PROMISING QUARTER

EASTER falling this year at the end of the month of March, is, perhaps, a convenient time to glance at the course of business in the first quarter of the year. On the whole, the tendency has been favourable, with a considerable number of important properties placed in the market, and a very fair demand, alike under the hammer and in private negotiation. Already this year three or four very large landed estates have been sold in their entirety, then divided into lots and successfully resold; and the list of smaller estates and country houses with a few acres that have found purchasers is quite a long one.

Some of the properties have been dealt with on behalf of executors anxious to close their trusts, and in these cases, full publicity being given to the fact that the vendors are thus acting, the interest of prospective purchasers has been stimulated, and sales have resulted at satisfactory prices. In other instances, for private reasons, the owners have given instructions to fix low reserves and to declare them, after the style of the favourite Scottish method of an "upset" price, and business has been done, occasionally at a point materially above what, in certain eventualities, would have been accepted.

During the "boom" period, as it has been called, there were hardly any quotations of fixed minima, nor does that surprise anyone who recalls that properties had only to be offered to be sold, at prices that ruled decidedly higher than any since. Many owners, no doubt, regret that they missed taking advantage of the then condition of the market, and there have been expressions of regret at the fact, for example, in the weighty document issued by the experts to whom fell the task of reporting on the finances of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge; but corporations and private owners, reflecting on what they may regard as lost opportunities, may find consolation in the thought that perhaps the absorptive power of the market was strained to its fullest extent in the "boom," and that, if much more real estate had been thrown upon the market at that time, the result would have been a decline in the level of prices to a point below what actually ruled. Certainly, so far as the two Universities are concerned, they have no reason to complain of the results of the more recent—some within the last few weeks—attempts to realise landed property. Sales for one of the Cambridge Colleges, announced in these columns a week or two ago, bear this out.

"Stabilisation" is a term of which much has lately been heard, and the process, still going on, has reflected the increased purchasing power of money in transactions in landed properties just as in all other directions. At the present time the supply of property awaiting auction is ample, but not excessive, and there are indications that, though more cautious than they were, buyers are as keen as ever to take advantage of the attractive opportunities so plentifully, and, as the season opens, to be yet more plentifully presented to them.

ESTATE MANAGEMENT.

THE PRINCE OF WALES has graciously intimated to the governors of the College of Estate Management his intention of being present at the inaugural ceremony on Tuesday, April 10th, upon the reconstitution, under a Royal charter, of the college. The governors, of whom Sir William Wells (Messrs. Chesterton and Sons) is Chairman, include representatives of the Auctioneers' and Estate Agents' Institute, to whom the inception of the college is due, and of the Surveyors' Institution. Sir Anker Simmons (head of the Henley-on-Thames firm, Messrs. Simmons and Sons) has been elected a governor, to represent the patrons of the college.

WYKEHURST PARK, SUSSEX.

ONE of the most valuable landed estates in Sussex—Wykehurst Park, about 1,830 acres—is coming into the market, by direction of Mr. Edward Huth. Wykehurst occupies a splendid position in a deer park of 270 acres, and there are twenty-three farms and small holdings, four private residences and fifty-six cottages, as well as 360 acres of larch and other woodlands, with a large part of the delightful village of Bolney. Messrs. Knight, Frank and Rutley, in conjunction with Messrs. R. H. and R. W. Clutton, are the agents.

The Chantry House, Bishop's Stortford, for many years the property of the Gilbey family, has been sold by Messrs. Knight, Frank and Rutley. Old as the house is, it seems to have been put up after the demolition of a yet earlier one. Perhaps the most noteworthy feature of the existing structure is the ornamental plasterwork, a portion of which is coloured, and all that has been capable of preservation has been religiously preserved. The origin of the house was the desire of the widow of one Baldwin Victor, in 1485, that masses should be sung for the repose of her husband's soul, and accordingly she endowed it with £8 a year, and the service was rendered until the Reformation.

Major-General E. G. Sinclair MacLagan has decided to dispose of Glenquiech and Memus, Forfarshire, and has instructed Messrs. Knight, Frank and Rutley to hold an auction. It is six miles from Kirriemuir on the lower reaches of the Braes of Angus, overlooking the valley of Strathmore. The property, 2,200 acres, includes Glenquiech House, woodlands, arable and rough pasture, the grouse moor yielding up to 150 brace.

Court Garden, Marlow, the late Mr. Robert Griffin's Georgian house, with 36 acres of park and grounds, will be offered in the coming season. The house commands the reach above Marlow Bridge, with the regatta course and winning post, Quarry Woods forming the background.

LORD CHATHAM'S RETREAT.

THE association of William Pitt, first Lord Chatham, with the Hampstead Heath house, now for sale by Messrs. Knight, Frank and Rutley, invests the property with exceptional interest. In the Domesday Book the place appears under the name of "Wildwoods," and its subsequent names have included North End Place, North End House and Pitt House. Mrs. Valentine Fleming has spent a great deal of money in modernisation, and a reception hall over 50ft. long has been built. Lord Chatham secluded himself in the house in 1767, when it belonged to Lord North, and the room he used is still much as it was at that time. The garret in which he spent most of his daylight hours was only 13ft. by 8ft., with a kind of box fitted to the door, so that the melancholy, gout-ridden inmate might take his food in without being seen by the servant who brought it to him.

Colonel C. W. Sofer Whitburn has decided to dispose of Addington Park, Kent, 2,300 acres, and has instructed Messrs. Knight, Frank and Rutley to offer it. The estate comprises the mansion, fourteen holdings, fruit and hop farms, and the major portion of the villages of Addington, Trottiscliffe and Offham, with premises in West Malling. The firm has sold Avenue House estate, Bishopton, Stratford-on-Avon, and Haygrass, near Taunton.

Touching on a note in the Estate Market page of March 10th, about Ewell Castle and Nonsuch Palace, a correspondent writes that "the ruins of Nonsuch Palace cover about four acres in Nonsuch Park, and the remains in the grounds of Ewell Castle are probably those of the Nonsuch banqueting hall, which is said to have been some little distance from the main structure."

HUNMANBY HALL SOLD.

LORD NUNBURNHOLME has bought Hunmanby Hall, Yorkshire, a choice William and Mary house. The whole of the outlying portions of the Hunmanby Hall estate, 2,700 acres, have been sold by Sir Dennis-Readett Bayley, through Messrs. John D. Wood and Co. The estate lies near Filey, a few miles from Bridlington and Scarborough.

The executors of the late Hon. Algernon Mills have sold Lechlade Manor, through Messrs. John D. Wood and Co. It is an attractive residential property of 120 acres, a mile from Lechlade station and within easy reach of Swindon, with Oxford only eighteen miles off. The house is a Tudor reproduction of hard stone, with typical mullioned and transomed windows and picturesque gables. A large expenditure was lately made in renewing the electric lighting system and on the central heating and such matters as the provision of extra bathrooms. There is a cricket pitch and pavilion in the grounds, and the park has some well grown elms and an avenue of young horse chestnuts.

Six miles north-east of Bury St. Edmunds lies the residential, agricultural and sporting estate of Troston, which has been placed in the hands of Messrs. Norfolk and Prior for sale in the spring, in conjunction with Messrs. Lacy Scott and Sons. The sale includes the small but interesting Jacobean manor house, which contains panelling, carved and moulded beams, decorated plaster ceilings and friezes, and carved oak and walnut chimneypieces typical of the Early Renaissance. There are two medium-sized residences, with gardens and paddocks; five well equipped farms and two small holdings; spinneys and woodlands; with the greater part of the village of Troston, the whole extending to nearly 1,700 acres.

THE DEMAND FOR FARMS.

QUITE a brisk business is reported in agricultural land in the last few days. Among the sales are that of Bank House Farm, Chadwick, near Bromsgrove, 158 acres, by Messrs. Parsons, Clark and Bodin; and a couple of holdings on the road midway from Taunton to Honiton, namely, Catchett Barton, 186 acres, for £1,700; and Carters and Oatens, 72 acres, to the tenant, for £1,010, through Messrs. C. R. Morris, Sons and Peard, who state that there was a large attendance of bidders.

Outlying portions of the Sadborow estate, which has been in the hands of the Bragge family ever since the reign of Queen Elizabeth, realised £8,915, under the hammer of Messrs. Hy. Duke and Son, at Chard, a holding of 140 acres, granted to the Colmer family in the time of Henry IV, making £2,200 (there is an old house with Jacobean remains), and another holding, of 115 acres, fetching £2,400.

Still in the West Country, another auction has to be noted, that by Messrs. Alfred Savill and Sons and Messrs. Alex. H. Turner and Co., of 1,058 acres of Fallapit estate, near Kingsbridge, fertile South Devon stock and dairy farms, the sales including Cuttery (129 acres), £3,200; Cross (166 acres), £3,300; Chilley (254 acres), £4,750; and Flear (187 acres), £3,725.

Admiral's Farm, a freehold and tithe free Fen holding of 475 acres, in Terrington St. Clement, was submitted at King's Lynn by Messrs. Bidwell and Sons. Bidding began at £16,000, and withdrawal was declared at an advance of £4,000. This, like one or two other farm auctions recently, was by order of mortgagees.

BROCKET HALL: TOTAL, £45,060.

A MOST successful auction of the contents of Brocket Hall, Hertfordshire, has just been concluded by Messrs. Foster, whose total realisations were approximately £45,060. Two of the chief lots were Sir Joshua Reynolds' whole-length portrait of George, Prince of Wales (George IV) with his charger, sold for £6,825 (Leggatt)—it was exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1784, and there is a note by Walpole, "This picture for Lord Melbourne at Brocket Hall"; and a pair of Louis XVI commodes of satinwood, for £15,435 (Duveen). Each commode is stamped, in two places, "M. Carlin, me." A set of eighteen Hepplewhite chairs realised £1,096 4s.; and there are, in nearly every page of the catalogue, items of the greatest interest, all the more so now that it is possible to append to them the details of the high prices under the hammer of the Pall Mall firm.

The sale at 4, Hyde Park Gardens, on behalf of the executors of the late Mr. J. G. Griffiths, C.V.O., occupied the greater part of a week, by Messrs. Hampton and Sons. Figures realised included: A sideboard of Adam design, 105 guineas; a small Louis XVI commode, 150 guineas; a Louis XV Aubusson suite, 200 guineas; a modern mahogany bookcase, 200 guineas; a Chippendale fire screen, with petit-point needlework panel, 60 guineas; a Chippendale card table, 76 guineas; an eighteenth century secretaire bookcase, 105 guineas; a small Chippendale table, 60 guineas; a Sheraton suite of six chairs, 145 guineas; two Persian carpets, 109 guineas. Persian rugs varied from 20 guineas to 30 guineas. For silver, the highest price per ounce was £7 10s. for a small coffee-pot, dated 1715. A picture by Waterhouse, "The Lady of Shalott," made 300 guineas; a Whistler engraving, "La Vieille aux Loques," 1858, second state, 23 guineas; and a Rembrandt etching, 1639, 48 guineas.

ARBITER.

PRINT COLLECTING AS A HOBBY

IT is a good thing to have a hobby, it adds an interest to life and often keeps one out of mischief and idleness; one might almost say a life without a hobby is like a ship without a rudder. I have myself derived an immense amount of pleasure out of print collecting: not that I profess any expert knowledge about prints, for the more one studies them the less one feels one knows, so vast is the subject, and my only motive in writing this article is to guide the would-be collector and help him to avoid the pitfalls I have fallen into myself. In the first place, I would say quite definitely it is no use buying prints indiscriminately simply because they attract for the moment; as the collection grows it will be found that it has no educative value, much less a commercial value, and will give little pleasure to the owner and his friends. The only way for the average man is to specialise—it may seem hard, because at the beginning we want to buy all and sundry. It is like going into one of the large stores at sale time and buying a lot of articles we do not really want because they are cheap. It is hard, but a check must be put on our desires, and we must resolutely turn our eyes from the fair Daphnes that come outside our own province, for to know all about all prints is beyond the power of ordinary mortals; but an immense amount of pleasure can be obtained by deciding beforehand what kind of prints we want to collect. I might say here that this article refers to "Old Prints," and though there are a number of excellent modern engravers whose prints will in time become much sought after, I do not think it wise to deal with them in this article, so the reader will understand I refer to "Old Prints" when I use the term Prints. The collector may choose from either "mezzotints," "stipple," or "line engravings."

Line engraving is of very early origin. Before 1820 the engraver generally worked on copper: he traced or scratched upon it an outline of the design he wanted to produce; he would then work this in with more or less detail with his "graver." After 1820 he used steel plates as well as copper, because the steel plate was found to wear better than the copper one. The collector of line engravings has a wide field; commencing with the work of the famous Dürer, he might follow the schools of Germany, Holland, Italy, France and England, right up to the close of the eighteenth century. Many of the early engravers worked in wood as well as metai, In the English school. Thomas Raynald's, "The Birthe of Mankynde," a book published in 1540, is said by many to contain the first English engraving from copper, and in Elizabeth's reign we find William Rogers engraving portraits of celebrated people for a living.

The earliest engravers mostly illustrated books with their work, but after Elizabeth we find several eminent English engravers who followed engraving as a profession. One remembers the names of Thomas Cockson about 1620, William Dolle, Robert Vaughan, Martin Droeshout, Thomas Cross, all contemporary about this time. Later engravers like Thomas Holloway, 1748-1827, William Hogarth and William Blake, who adopted a style of his own and can hardly be classed among the line engravers, produced excellent work.

We see, therefore, the wide field open to the collector of line engravings, even in the English school alone. Mezzotint engraving differs from line engraving because in pure mezzotint lines are not visible, and the general effect is beautifully soft; this effect is obtained by raising a burr on the plate. The art of mezzotint was raised to great perfection in England by such men as "Earlom," Valentine Green, J. R. Smith, James Ward, William Ward, Samuel Cousins and David Lucas.

There are few prints more beautiful than the English school of mezzotint at its best period, whether in colour or plain; and though the best are almost prohibitive in price, there are many beautiful examples still to be found.

The mezzotint portraits of ladies after the great masters are the most coveted by the collector; but many excellent landscapes have been produced by this process, e.g., after Morland, Constable and Turner.

The third method of engraving is in stipple. Line engravers produced their designs by a series of lines, straight, broken or curved; a design may also be produced by a series of dots, and an engraver who makes use of dots is an engraver in stipple; and though it was not until the eighteenth century that stipple engraving came into favour, yet the process was known in early days, and an examination of some very early line engravings will reveal dots as well as line used in combination. The man who made it famous in England was Francisco Bartolozzi. This engraver came to England in 1764 and rapidly won favour, and is said to have engraved in his career over 2,000 plates. Impressions were often struck off these plates in brown, bistre or red, and in colours. Other famous stipple engravers were P. W. Tomkins, J. K. Sherwin, Charles Knight, etc. In 1810 the art seems to have declined, but during the fifty years or so in which it flourished an enormous number of plates were engraved and many of the famous line engravers abandoned mezzotint work for stipple. In any case, there is a wide field for the collector of stipple engravings, and they will always appeal to the public by their delicacy and beauty. I need hardly add that the engraver in mezzotint and stipple worked also in colour, though these prints are not as common and easy to find as the plain ones.

Having made up our minds, therefore, what kind of print we want to collect, whether line or mezzotint or stipple, let us read the best text books on the subject—there are many excellent books dealing with each method of engraving. Afterwards, if possible, let us visit our great museums where prints are stored and may be seen; it is a good thing, too, to handle them if opportunity occurs. In this way the eye will grow accustomed to the genuine article, and we shall be less likely to be deceived with the countless forgeries that flood the market.

The next rule I give is always to try and buy the best. One good print is worth twenty imperfect ones. We wonder sometimes at the high prices paid for examples of certain master-engravers, but generally the print is a "first state" and in mint condition, and, though we may possess the same print, it may be a later "state," with margins cut and not worth a fraction of the former one. Remember prices are not fictitious. The "first state" was the best and the copper plate rapidly wore its surface away, so that succeeding impressions were often less sharp and brilliant. Especially in coloured prints late impressions were often re-worked or re-engraved in places, materially spoiling their beauty and value.

To a beginner the various "states," are always confusing. The engraver was accustomed to take impressions from his plate as he was making it, to see how his work was progressing. These early proofs, as he called them, were often unfinished, and of little artistic or commercial value, but the last impressions he took, with the plate finished or practically finished, were brilliant copies, the finest procurable. I need not in this short article enter into the intricate questions of all the proofs and states of prints. I will merely give three states that are generally recognised.

First state, or "Proof before Letters," which usually means the painter's and engraver's names and the publication line, all of which are lightly engraved or etched, but no title to the print is given.

The second state, or "Open Letter Proof," as above, but with the title in open or scratched letters.

The third state, or print state, with all the lettering in a highly finished letter.

It will be seen, then, from the above very brief description of states, how important it is for the beginner to study the subject, for on the proof or state often depend the value and rareness of the print, apart from its real beauty.

So jealous have some famous collectors been of their treasures that they have actually disfigured rare prints with their private marks to attest their genuineness. Generally, however, they put their mark on the back of the print, and it adds considerably to the interest of a print to be able to trace its pedigree.

We will suppose, then, our reader has decided on what class of prints he wants to collect, has read all that there is to be read on the subject and visited the museum. What is the next step? Personally, I think for the beginner the reputed auction room is the next place to visit and be an observer at a few sales of good prints, Try and find out the well known dealers and collectors and watch their bids, and do not think that because a seeming rarity goes for a mere song it is a bargain; it is often dear at any price. When grown accustomed to the auction room and its ways, go on a view day and select the print or prints you may fancy, and then on the sale day watch the "knowing ones"; if they are bidding, you can bid too, and very often obtain it at its market price; but if they leave it alone, leave it alone too. If this rule is adhered to, you will generally find you have either bought nothing, or something you want and of value and merit. In this way a small collection may be started, and as one advances in knowledge, more boldness may be adopted.

It is surprising how few people know anything about prints, and there are countless treasures to be picked up still by anyone who knows what he wants and can tell the gold from the dross. Often I have had a real holiday when I have been able to return home with my treasure wrapped, it may be, in old newspapers, and after removing the dirty glass and frame found underneath a fine old engraving, dusty and dirty but undamaged. Once I bought a common oleograph because of the quaint old frame; imagine my joy on taking it out and finding beneath it a beautiful stipple by Bartolozzi. Such finds are rare, but they do happen, and there is always the chance. On the other hand, when I was beginning to take an interest in prints I attended a local auction and saw a pair of coloured prints in old black frames. There were few people there, and only two dealers. I wondered why they did not bid, but in my rash haste I did, and some poor novice like myself bid against me until the pair were knocked down to me for six guineas, I eagerly took them home and thought they were a great bargain. To-day I see my folly; they were a pair of inferior line engravings hand coloured, of no value but for the frames, and to-day they hang in the lumber room, "caveat emptor."

One word in conclusion about framing and keeping prints. Do not paste them down, as it prevents handling the paper or seeing any collectors' marks. Each print may be hinged to a sheet of thick drawing paper and covered with another piece of the same size, with a square cut out a little larger than the engraved surface; these two sheets can then be hinged together and the print is ready for the portfolio. Do not put tissue paper between the prints, but a sheet of the best drawing paper.

If, however, you desire to frame them, suspend the print by the upper edge to a thick sheet of best drawing paper as above. The mount will then be framed, not the print. There are various opinions about placing the print close up to the glass. Some say it is best as it prevents damp, but personally I do not like the glass to touch the surface of the print, therefore I recommend the former way; but each man must suit himself. Frames should have hinged backs so that the prints can be removed at will, and should be as simple as possible.

I have not in this article spoken of the wiles and ways of the forger and faker, but they are many and ingenious, and almost every collector, even experienced ones, has but too close knowledge of their activities, but I always say the element of risk and uncertainty one encounters in one's adventures gives additional interest to the hobby of print collecting. RARE DON QUIXOTE GOBELINS PORTIERES

STAINED GLASS AND FURNITURE.

AMONGST the numerous series of tapestries woven at the Gobelins in the course of the eighteenth century, the most prominent, the most highly priced and the most often reproduced are those representing the story of Don Quixote, after designs by Charles Coypel. The series was begun by him in 1714, when he was about twenty years of age; the last cartoon was finished in 1751, a few years before he died. There were in all twenty-eight scenes, and about 250 tapestries were woven, some favourite incidents being repeated many times. Seven types of borders were used. Coypel's idea was a small picture containing the subject set in mouldings and placed on a very wide and richly decorated "surround" in rich carved and gilt frame. The most popular of these types is that with the crimson damask ground, which was composed by Tessier, the flower painter of the Gobelins.

Upon this gorgeous ground, where the flat pattern of flowers and leaves is darker than the foundation, there are hung up, by blue ribbons, swags, wreaths and festoons of the richest flowers, woven with such delicacy that the effect is as fine as painting, while yet more powerful and decorative. The peacock in his pride is placed high over the middle of the tapestry. The colour scheme is bright and spring-like against the crimson ground which in England we call "Rose du Barri." These tapestries are spread far and wide—in the Royal collection and at Belvoir (the property of the Duke of Rutland) in England, in France, Germany and America. He who would acquire four or five of them—if such were to be had—must think, not in tens, but in hundreds of thousands of pounds.

With the tapestries went coverings for furniture of the same pattern and colour. The portières are the rarest—only eight seem to have been recorded. One of these we illustrate, by courtesy of Messrs. Puttick and Simpson, who are to put it up for auction with two others on April 13th. They were formerly in Taymouth Castle, the property of the late Marquess of Breadalbane.

These portières belonging to the Don Quixote tapestries were intended for Royal use, and M. Fenaille publishes Tessier's account for the designs, amounting to 350 livres, with 40 livres in addition for drawing the Royal cipher in the middle wreath, in 1774. The three tapestries to be sold do not contain the cipher. They were begun in Audran's atelier in the Gobelins in January, 1755, and the last (there were four originally) was finished the following October. They measure 9ft. 10ins. in height by 4ft. 10ins. wide. They were chosen instead of, or exchanged for, a Savonnerie carpet due to M. de Vandières—or, to give him his historic title, the Marquis de Marigny—brother of Mme. de Pompadour, and so passed out of the Royal possession.

Another set of four, containing the Royal cipher and woven by Cozette in 1775–76 was given to the King of Sweden and are now in the Royal Castle, Stockholm.

At the same sale and belonging to the same property will be a large Brussels tapestry representing the last scenes in the Life of Abraham, framed in a magnificent border of flowers, etc., woven during the first half of the sixteenth century and containing the weaver's monogram, C. M., with merchant's mark; and a Flemish tapestry of the late seventeenth century, of the subject of Venus and Adonis with Cupid in a landscape. A choice collection of English porcelain, formed by Mr. John Williams of Llandudno, and French and English furniture will also be put up.

On April 11th Messrs. Christie will begin a two days' sale of English and Italian furniture, Swiss stained glass, faience and stoneware, the property of Cornelia Countess of Craven, which was formerly at Coome Abbey, Coventry.

PORTIERE BELONGING TO THE GOBELINS DON QUIXOTE TAPESTRIES.
9ft. 10ins. by 4ft. 10ins.

The ceramics include a fair number of grès-de-Flandres jugs, some German stoneware, and a few examples of Chinese and other porcelain; while there is some English and Continental glass. With the former is a "Young Pretender" cup and cover, engraved with the national floral emblems and having a coin in the stem. There is a large collection of panels of Swiss stained glass; many of these are of the sixteenth century and armorial. They show a strong bias towards religious subjects in most cases, with a universal tendency to commemorate family history; for example, an early seventeenth century panel, depicting the Descent from the Cross, contains two shields with monograms and a tablet inscribed with thirteen names of the Pyfferin family, beneath which the donors are portrayed.

Among the objects of art are a circular rondel of English enamel, with the arms and cipher of Charles II in blue and white enamel and gilt bronze, three large leather black-jacks, three sets of embroidered vestments and other Italian embroideries. The furniture includes an Elizabethan oak Court cupboard, with splayed cupboard at the top and folding doors below, the panels inlaid with flowers and foliage in boxwood and holly, and a chequer pattern on the borders carved with masks and gadroons; an Elizabethan bedstead with four posts fluted on the lower part, the head and canopy carved with caryatid figures, inlaid with architectural subjects and formal flowers and hung with green and yellow damask curtains; a Cromwellian armchair upholstered in contemporary woolwork of foliage on a black ground; Queen Anne walnut furniture; Chippendale bedsteads, window seats and sofa, and an Adam mahogany wardrobe.

With the Continental furniture there are Louis XIV marqueterie commodes, and a Regency armchair elaborately and boldly carved; several Italian cassone, one having its front painted with scenes from a romance and with emblematic female figures at the sides, another carved with cherubs, caryatid figures and gryphons in relief on a gilt background; and a pair of Italian ebony cabinets, the door panels of one carved with Apollo and Daphne and Diana and Actæon, the companion with the Nativity and Adoration of the Magi. There are a number of Italian chairs, some Indo-Portuguese pieces, as well as Dutch and Flemish examples of interest.

The result of the sale of the further selection of books from the Britwell Court library, the property of Mr. S. R. Christie-Miller, is not altogether pleasant reading. Out of a total sum of £63,336 15s. realised by Messrs. Sotheby, £53,641 was paid by Dr. A. S. W. Rosenbach of Philadelphia, which means that the great majority of most famous and rare examples of early English literature have left our shores for ever. The loss is irreparable, but it may be mitigated if the example of reproducing these works in facsimile be followed by American collectors. D. VAN DE GOOT

THE ART OF DECORATION

House decoration is an instinct which few possess. An "ideal home" is not made by a hasty choice of paint and wall papers. To achieve the essentials of beautiful rooms—colour value, character and atmosphere—it is wise to consult the expert who combines the practical skill of the craftsman with the imagination of the artist. Almost every corner has its decorative possibilities, but it takes experience to find them and artistic insight to carry them out. Gaze's reputation as builders and decorators is a guarantee that every house furnished and decorated in "the Gazeway" will have a definite charm and beauty of its own.

THE 20-70 H.P. CROSSLEY

SOME people profess to wonder if the sports car as a type is justified. A few go further and maintain that it has a very limited appeal, a still more limited market, and is a car lacking interest for the ordinary motorist. Such critics—or cynics—betray an entire ignorance of the true nature of the sporting car that is not a racing car pure and simple, and they certainly can never have been out in the new 20–70 h.p. Crossley. This is one of those very few cars that it is a real and unmitigated pleasure to drive, one of those that satisfies the man at the wheel merely by having him there. It is a pleasure to be in and an ecstasy to handle a car like this, and there is surely no room for difference of opinion about it. I would go so far as to say that the man who cannot appreciate a car like this "is not only fit for treasons, spoils and stratagems, but his whole life is already a treason, a spoil and a stratagem."

Coming down to bald facts—beyond which, indeed, it is unnecessary to go in order to make an interesting and fascinating story of the sports Crossley—the car is, in essentials, a "gingered up" version of the 19.6 h.p. which made its début at the Olympia Show of 1921 and was described in these pages a few weeks afterwards. In my opinion, not the least of the attractions of this new model is what may be called its "ordinariness." There is not a single feature of the whole chassis that cannot be described as strictly conventional—except its performance—and there is nothing that has not long stood the severe test of time. A cylinder head that is detachable and has no valve caps follows approved modern practice, but it is one of the few modern innovations that give no room for scepticism as to dependability. As a matter of fact, it is not so very modern after all, as it has been used quite a long time on some American cars. Side-by-side valves are not unconventional, although the overhead enthusiasts would have us believe that they will be so in a few years' time; but few of these "overhead" men can know of what a good side-by-side valve engine is really capable. The sole justification for the overhead valve, as far as I understand it, is efficiency, and if such efficiency as one gets from this Crossley is obtainable with the old-fashioned and simpler side-by-side valve, why have the extra complication of the overhead? Cleanness and simplicity are the keynotes of this four-cylinder design; everything that needs to be got at is in a position where it can not only be seen, but actually handled. The Smith carburettor seems to be asking you to feel it as soon as you lift the off side of the bonnet, and at the same side, the dynamo is quite inviting. Truth demands the admission that the dynamo has a belt drive, and I make it as a most unwilling admission that such a motor should bear such a scar. Nevertheless, there is the genuine extenuation that the dynamo belt has no other work to do, the pulleys over which it runs are unusually large and there is a simple means of adjustment.

On the same side of the engine there is the magneto, which has been carefully placed by Mr. Wishart to demonstrate that a magneto disposed longitudinally need not have a permanently hidden contact-breaker and distributor. No need arose for the actual test, but judging by appearances one could have off the contact-breaker and distributor of this magneto in "less than no time," should occasion demand. On the other side of the engine is the oil-level indicator, also quite visible, the oil-filler and the water pump, the spindle of which is a continuation of the cam-shaft. No other engine particulars seem to call for notice, unless it be that the crank-shaft is hollow for lubrication purposes—i.e., oil is forced through it and to all its bearings under pressure—and that it is balanced—and what balancing! But of this more anon. We can say au revoir to the engine with the statement that its dimensions are 90mm. by 150mm., so that the cubic capacity is 3,705 c.c. and the tax £20.

A Ferodo-faced cone clutch transmits the power to a four-speed gear-box, of which the ratios are 3.33, 5.17, 7.93 and 12.54 to 1, and both clutch and gear-box do their work very well indeed. The clutch is perfect even if it is a cone, for it is extremely smooth and light, it gives a very easy gear change, and it will allow this fairly weighty car with its "hot-stuff" engine to be started quite nicely on top gear. That is the kind of clutch to have. Through an open propeller shaft final transmission is to a spiral bevel driven rear axle which is only semi-floating. On a car like this you might have finished the job properly, Mr. Wishart, and given us a fully floating axle!

Suspension is by semi-elliptic springs both front and rear, the latter following Crossley practice of many years in being underslung, and wire wheels for 820mm. by 120mm. tyres. The hand brake operates on the rear wheels, being rather noisy but quite efficient and powerful; and the foot brake is mounted behind the gear-box, not at all noisy, very powerful and extremely progressive in its action. It has long been a feature of Crossley steering boxes—containing a worm and complete worm wheel—that the adjustment for taking up wear is of the right kind—that is to say, it allows not merely for the turning round of the wheel, it allows for adjustment of mesh of the two components—very necessary, but very seldom found.

ESSENTIALLY SPORTING IN APPEARANCE AS WELL AS IN CHARACTER IS THIS NEW CROSSLEY MODEL.

BODY-WORK.

It is, perhaps, not quite fair to say a great deal about the body-work of the car, for I understand that the one I actually sampled was the first of its line and is marked for modification in production models; but, unfortunately, the modifications indicated in the catalogue before me—or, at least, some of them—suggest the ruin of a truly excellent body design, and in the hope of mitigating a catastrophe I will put my thought into words. I suppose that the priceless advice I am about to give will receive the usual treatment; if ever it is brought to the notice of the designer it will immediately go to swell the contents of his waste-paper basket; but this car is too good a thing to be spoilt for the lack of a few words.

Now, this Crossley body as I know it is a very promising specimen indeed. It has as many good points as any and very few bad ones. Among these latter, the chief are inadequate depth to the seats and a windscreen rather too far from the steering wheel and the driver. Mr. Wishart would probably say that it cannot be brought any closer without impairing ease of access to the front seats, and we have seen what a demon he is for ease of access—and all power to his elbow; but, having achieved the well nigh impossible in so many things, he can surely do it in this, and I want to see that wind screen brought a few inches further rearwards and the weather protection of the body improved—I am speaking of the weather protection due to the sides of the body itself, not the weather protection of hood and side curtains. Lowering the seats will be an excellent step in the right direction, but I utterly fail to understand why it says in the catalogue that the front side panels of the body are "swept away to give more room to the driver." He does not want more room, there is plenty of it as it is; what he wants is more protection, which would be afforded by lowering the seats and taken away by lowering the sides of the body. There were also rumours floating round the garage in Page Street, where I found this wonder car, about increased leg room for the driver and his passenger. For my passenger and myself the leg room was perfect, as was nearly everything else, but we may have shorter legs than the people who are going to buy sporting Crossleys—and there will be plenty of them as soon as the car gets known as it deserves to be known. Increasing the leg room will mean that the driver is still further away from the windscreen. Ugh!

There is a hood with this car that really does what it is supposed to do, and there are side curtains opening with the doors. This, indeed, is luxury with a sports model; but I do not quite see how the driver will ever be able to make use of his side curtain, because the hand brake lever is outside the body, though perhaps a convenient hole comme signalling flap will do this necessary trick. The present assets of this body are perfect appearance and the raw materials for perfect comfort, very few and very simple modifications being necessary to ensure it in full.

But car comfort depends on more things than bodywork comfort—for instance, springing. No matter what the angles of the seats are like and what the quality of the upholstery, satisfactory springing is an essential. Now, that of this Crossley is not satisfactory; it is superb. It is because there are so many things about this car that can only be justly described as superb that I am so anxious it or they shall not be marred by a few silly little details that are not quite as they ought to be. I sat in the back seat for ten minutes and found it absurdly high and not at all inviting.

THE APPEAL AND CHARACTER OF THE SPORTS CAR.

It will have been gathered from the foregoing that the Crossley is no ordinary car. It is not; but before attempting to give any impressions of its road qualities let me devote a couple of words to the general and somewhat vexed question of the sporting car and its functions. Some motorists, especially those who own cars of the heavy-bodied and stately rather than active type, look upon the sports car as intended expressly for the road hog; as a car that no sane man wants to own or even ride in, for, with a minimum speed capacity of something above 60 m.p.h. and a fierce and utterly uncontrollable temper, the sports car, it is thought, is a dangerous projectile that ought to be by law either prohibited from existing altogether, or limited in its ownership to gunner subalterns strictly confined to the Long Valley. No idea is further removed from the truth.

In the first place, the sports car is not a racing car. In many cases its maximum speed is considerably less than that of some of the high-powered aristocrats among motor cars—and, indeed, this very Crossley is a case in point, for I have driven faster cars of which the makers would most strongly deprecate any suggestion of "sportiveness" in their character and of which the majority of owners are of the sedate, slow-moving variety. In the next place, a really good sporting car is the easiest of all cars to drive and control, provided that the driver is not a novice. I think I would go so far as to say that of all the cars I have handled this Crossley was the most easily controlled and the most docile, in spite of its guaranteed maximum speed capacity of 75 m.p.h.

Because a man is at the wheel of a car capable of 75 m.p.h., it does not follow that he will never be doing less, even when road conditions are quite favourable to high speeds. Then why have such a car, with its inevitably extravagant fuel consumption by comparison with a similar car of lower performance? The answer lies in the fact that many of us—most of us, I suppose—like to do our modest 40 m.p.h. for fairly long periods where road conditions allow. On a car of which the maximum speed is, say, 45 m.p.h. or 50 m.p.h., we are stressing it to within very near the limit of its capacity, and if the stress be the regular and normal way of driving, then the life of that car is going to be unjustifiably short. But if the speed of which the car is readily capable is some 70 m.p.h. and we still drive at about 40 m.p.h., then we are not stressing that car at all. Given such treatment and nothing more exacting, such a car will last—metaphorically and comparatively—for ever. This is the great charm of the high capacity car. It is not so much what it will do when it is pushed, it is the way in which it does what to an ordinary car would be the hardest possible work. There is no exaggeration or inaccuracy in the statement that this Crossley "tootles" along at 40 m.p.h. much the same as an ordinary car runs at half the speed; and the sensation that comes from driving a car at 40 m.p.h., with the feeling that the engine is doing no work at all, that the car is simply gliding and that there is almost unlimited power in hand, is a sensation that defies description—at least by me.

THE CROSSLEY ON THE ROAD.

The particular charm of this Crossley triumph is due only in part to what may be called the general character of a good sporting car. Not only does it "toddle" along at 40 m.p.h., ready to jump to 60 m.p.h. "on immediate call," but it does it so sedately and in such a genuine lady-like manner. When speaking of the ordinary 19.6 h.p. some twelve months ago, I said that the engine ran like a good six-cylinder. That remark holds good with double emphasis in the case of the sports model. At no point in its range of speed on top gear—and it is "some" range—is there the slightest suspicion of an engine period; the acceleration can only be described as terrific, whether the gears be used as they ought to be used or not, and the flexibility is in full keeping with the rest of the performance. The car runs quite well at less than 10 m.p.h. on top gear, its acceleration up to—well, up to maximum, whatever that may be—is steady and gentle all the way, although I have just described it as violent, which involves no inconsistency.

In the mere matter of performance in the narrower sense—i.e., maximum speed and hill climbing—I would not call this car remarkable—that is, not remarkable, bearing in mind its type. This is one of those cars that can do very many things, but nevertheless most impresses the critic not by what it does but by how it does it. At what may be called ordinary and safe road speeds for such a car—say, up to 50 m.p.h.—its beautiful, smooth sweeping movement, the sweet running of its engine and the gentle burble of the exhaust are enough to make any man forget all the cares in the world. Indeed, the driver who can save all his troubles from being drowned in this exhaust note, insistent without being obtrusive, and who does not see his worries falling behind on the roadside to prop up the telegraph poles that look like palings, must be a soulless driver indeed: he might make an excellent taximan, but he will never be a car driver.

Thus on Brooklands track the only lap that we tried "all out" was a failure because the plugs would not stand the strain, an incidental lesson to those who think that any sparking plug is good enough for any engine and for any work. Then after giving the car a short rest we tried the flying half mile. Here the speedometer steadily hung on to 75 m.p.h., but my passenger, who held the watch and assured me that he knew how to work it, gave the time as 28 3-5secs., which is a long way from 75 m.p.h. Suppose we split the difference and say that the speed was 69 m.p.h.—it's not good enough for a car of this type, though it is forgivable in a car that commits its misdemeanours so nicely as does this Crossley, whereas it would not be with a car that was purely a road-hogging speed monster. With a standing start at the bottom and with four passengers the car took us up the test hill on second gear at 16 m.p.h.—by speedometer; on first speed the speedometer needle never fell below 22 m.p.h., which was a distinctly creditable effort.

What might have been my star performance on Pebblecombe was spoilt because my coat fouled the gear lever as I tried to change down to second at about 35 m.p.h. The gear lever is not at all well placed, for it is too close to the seat cushion, but the necessary alteration should be made to the lever and not to the cushion if this would mean taking the driver any further away from the windscreen.

With all its luxury and all its refinement the price of this car is £875, and rack my brains as I will I cannot think of any car in which I would rather see £875 of my own money invested. There may be a better car at the price for anyone who can appreciate a car of this character, but I do not know its name, and I am sure I should not know its pedigree, which is a quite important consideration. This Crossley comes perilously near to being an absolutely perfect motor car. A few little corners rubbed off there and a few additions here—such as four wheel brakes, about which the makers know something—and it will be, and there are not many cars of which this can be said.

W. Harold Johnson.

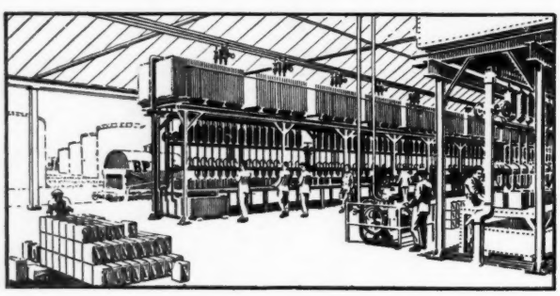
THE ADOLESCENCE OF THE CAR

IMAGINE two football teams opposed to one another—the one composed of fifteen men more or less up to international standard, but all entire strangers to each other; the other team composed of men up to, say, county standard, but knowing each other thoroughly, after, perhaps, a couple of seasons playing together. Ignoring the element of luck and barring accidents, who will win, the firstclass strangers or the second class intimates? Co-operation, skilful combination and the knowledge of each other's idiosyncrasies will usually be found to give the team that may be inferior in constitution as regards its individual members a very powerful pull over its rival, so that the extra skill of the individual members of the latter will prove unavailing against the combined and pulling together efforts of the inferior players.

And so it is with motor cars. The individual components of a car cannot be expected to work so well and so effectively together, when they meet for the first time, as they can and will work together when they have been properly trained in co-operative action and when they have all got to know each other thoroughly. And the period of training, the period of learning how to give and take, is, for motor car components, the first few hundred miles of that working life which they are henceforth doomed to spend in unison—or at least in each other's company—the unison depends on how well they have been trained.

Too many owners are inclined to overlook this altogether. They expect the parts of a brand-new car to work just as well both individually and collectively as they ought to work when they have all settled down to the new life—bedded down or run themselves in is the more usual term. And because an adequate and proper period is not given for this running-in process many an owner driver becomes dissatisfied with his car and complains that it is a most unsatisfactory vehicle in every way, whereas the real cause of his dissatisfaction is that he has not treated his car as it ought to have been treated in its period of "component training." To some extent this component training is carried out at the factory; engines are tested on the bench, and sometimes they are given a preliminary "running in" under external power. The same applies to gear-boxes and the remainder of the transmission, and, finally, every car has to pass some sort of road test before it is sent out for delivery to an agent and through him to the customer. But such is the modern demand for "cheap" cars and so great is the desire of manufacturers to satisfy that demand—most of them find they must satisfy it or go out of business—that the preliminary testing of the car of to-day, both as regards its components and as regards the complete vehicle, is not so complete and exhaustive as it ought to be.

True, many, indeed most, factories now have inspection departments, which a few years ago would have been regarded as superfluous treasures, but they are inspection departments for the checking of parts and components in their progress through the factory. These inspection rooms do not check the working of a unit consisting of various components, they simply examine the components before these are passed for assembly. The testing and examination of the units under actual working conditions can never be satisfactorily replaced by this inspection system, good though it may be as an additional and very valuable precaution against the introduction of faulty material and bad workmanship. But there are indications that in some factories so much is made of the "up-to-date and efficient inspection department," that the older and more important actual testing of working units and of the complete car is relegated to second place, or, at any rate, is not given the serious attention that it deserves. One very good reason is that it costs much



Filling the Khaki Can

This is a much more complicated process than the average motorist would imagine. He little knows the extraordinary care which is taken at the "BP" Filling Depots to ensure that he gets the full two gallons of motor spirit, and that the spirit itself is absolutely pure and uncontaminated.

Every can, before it enters the Filling-room, is carefully tested to see that it is air-tight. It is thoroughly cleansed with a special petrol spray to remove every trace of water or foreign matter. Then it is freshly painted.

The Filling-room is equipped with patent automatic fillers, inspected and sealed by the Board of Trade, making it certain that full measure is given and that no grit or dirt gets in. When you buy "BP" you get the "Best Possible" Motor Spirit in the best possible condition.

"BP" is the only entirely British petrol—British in every stage from the Crude Oil well to the familiar Khaki Can.

money. The most expensive cars are all adequately and thoroughly tested before being passed out—and the customer pays for it, as of course he ought to pay, and he certainly gets his money's worth.

It is not necessary to enter into the details as to exactly what road and bench testing does that "laboratory" testing cannot do, but that makers realise the incompleteness of their system may be read in any medium-priced car instruction book. There the new owner is told most emphatically not to exceed, say, 25 m.p.h. for the first 300 miles of the car's life on the road—and very excellent and very necessary advice it is. But how often is it observed? When it is acted on in both letter and spirit the result is usually a satisfied owner of the car; when it is ignored, the maker is inundated with complaints about the car's unsatisfactory behaviour.

Thus the first thing that should be realised by the owner of a brand-new car is that because the car is supposed to be capable of a certain maximum speed, he must not expect to get that speed until every part of the car has become properly run in. If he insists on trying, the result will be trouble that may become immediately apparent—if the owner is lucky, for he can then claim under guarantee—but will be far more likely only to show itself when the car has covered a few thousand miles and the guarantee period has expired, when troubles will begin that ought not to have begun until the car had done several more thousand miles.

And when a six months' guarantee has expired a couple of months ago there is no claim because the car is running and behaving as if it were at least two years old. A car that has been sensibly and properly handled in the first few months of its working life will be better at the end of two years than will be another exactly similar car at the end of twelve months if it has been abused and put to hard work before it was ready for it. It is said of human beings that it is worry that kills, not work, and premature hard work is the motor car's greatest worry, to which it is just as susceptible as the most sensitive human being. A car of which the maximum speed is claimed by its makers to be, say, 45 m.p.h. should never be asked to exceed 25 m.p.h. until it has covered at least 250 miles. A claimed maximum speed of 60 m.p.h. may permit of 45 m.p.h. in quite early days on the road, but the car for which 60 m.p.h. is claimed by the modern modest manufacturer is not everybody's car.

The story has been told of the man who bought a motor car and at the end of his first thousand miles called on the agent from whom he had made his purchase. The car was running quite well, but when should he put some oil in the engine and when should he blow up the tyres, he wanted to know! One of the tyres was nearly flat, and it was a real compliment to the car that none of its big ends had given out. Tyres will never forgive neglect, and if run for any distance at a lower pressure than that recommended by their makers for the load they have to carry they will have their revenge by making a premature retirement from active life. A pocket pressure gauge costs very little and it pays to slip it on the tyre valves at least once a fortnight, assuming that the tyres all appear to be losing no air; if loss of pressure is apparent, then what is wanted is not a pressure gauge but activity with the pump.

Except in the case of cars that are known to have undergone an adequate road test before being handed over to the customer, the oil in the engine should be emptied out after the first 500 miles, the engine cleaned internally with paraffin—by pouring about a quarter of a pint into each cylinder and turning the engine vigorously either with the starter or by hand for about two minutes—and after all the paraffin has drained away through the open drain cock of the crank case, then the engine should be refilled with fresh oil of the correct brand, i.e., that recommended by the makers of the car and not necessarily by the vendor of oils. With an expensive car or one that has to the owner's knowledge been through a thorough road test before leaving the factory, this process may well be delayed until the car has done 1,000 miles. To delay it longer is not asking for immediate trouble but it is denying the car a fair opportunity of giving of its best for the longest possible time.

Modern transmission systems ought not to require attention until a car has done at least 1,000 miles, but they very often do. In any case the addition of lubricant to the gear-box and back axle can do no harm unless the back axle is one of those stupid ones that allow every spot of superfluous oil to leak on to the brake drums. Brakes are allowed to demand adjustment after 200 miles, but they ought not to want it again for another 1,200 miles, unless there is something wrong with the design, or, more probably, the driver. Steering gears are important and should, therefore, be looked after with more care than they may actually need. Fresh grease in the steering box and front axle connections after, say, 500 miles is advisable, but there should be no need for adjustment for at least 1,200 miles, and then it should be a case of comfort rather than necessity. If spring gaiters are fitted their lubricators should be replenished with grease every 500 miles—it matters not whether it be the first 500 of the car's life or the last.

At the end of the 25 m.p.h. period—say after 250 miles—every nut and bolt on any chassis costing less than £1,000 should be gone over with a spanner. There may be nothing to tighten, but there may be something vital that is a trifle

Perfect Passenger Protection

Tucked up behind that highly efficient front screen how often do you give a thought to your passengers behind? With a stretch of open road ahead the old fascination to "go all out" comes over you and you're off! The speedometer needle gradually moves forward 35—40—45—50—55, and—when, because compelled to do so, you slow up, you are surprised that your friends behind look slightly ruffled and not over pleased! Well, sit there yourself—try it—and you will then realise that you are robbing them of more than half their pleasure by lack of that efficient protection which the gives. Oh, yes, there are other Rear Screens—many of them, but none other which possesses the same protective qualities—none other that is so easily adjusted—none other that is entirely free from "creep" and rattle, and none other that you can fit successfully to the car with adjustable front seats. .. .. loose and a stitch in time here saves many more than nine. In fact, all these precautions and special attentions to the new car must be regarded as precautionary measures. With the exception of testing the tyre pressures and renewing the engine lubricant, none of the measures suggested needs be regarded as an absolute essential. The point is that together they mean care for the car in the most delicate stage of its life. Properly looked after at the beginning, a car will generously repay its owner for the little extra care and time devoted to it.

And now a word on the other side. Nothing is worse for the modern car than continual tinkering. In the old days one had always to be tuning and adjusting every working part of the car in order to get the vehicle to go and keep it going, and one seldom grumbled at what to-day would be considered more than enough to condemn any car. But many an owner driver is only happy when he is doing something to his car, especially when it happens to be a recent acquisition, and the poor thing suffers from medicines and operations of which it has not the slightest need. If the car needs attention, either in a general or in a particular way, by all means let it have it, but do not make the need for attention. "Let sleeping dogs lie" and "leave well alone" are excellent mottoes for the owner of a new car, especially if it happens to be his first car and he is not thoroughly au fait with the true nature of the beast.

There are, however, one or two things that the owner with the necessary knowledge at his disposal may try on a new car after it has done a few hundred miles, with a reasonable hope of improving its general behaviour. Slightly smaller jets in the carburettor may be possible without any loss in performance but with some gain as to fuel consumption, and especially is this the case when delivery has been taken at, say, this time of the year and the running-in period ends with the coming of warmer weather. Another, and in some ways better, method of securing the same result is to fit an extra air valve to the carburettor—a practice universally condemned by carburettor makers, but nevertheless often adopted with excellent results. Such a requirement as brake adjustment can hardly be described as tuning, although it is tuning of a sort and does affect the road performance of the car; and brakes will always want adjusting after a few hundred miles on any but the very best of chassis. Cleaning out the radiator is another useful though not absolutely necessary precaution, and detachable wheels should be removed at least once every three months. Take the wheels off, grease the hubs and replace them; it may save much perspiring and profanity on a wet night when a puncture occurs and the offending wheel cannot be removed because it has become stuck and partially rusted on its mounting.

Finally, though really first in order of time, examine the tool-kit of a new car and ascertain that there are in it all the tools that are likely to be required for ordinary roadside jobs, especially wheel removal. Nothing is more annoying than to find when one comes to change a wheel on the road that the jack will not go under the axle, and this is a failing that I have discovered on more than one presumably first-class car with an "adequate" tool-kit. It is seldom indeed that one finds a tool-kit of a modern car incapable of improvement by the addition of a good pair of pliers or a set of box spanners. J.

Brooklands Automobile Racing Club.

THE Easter Meeting at Brooklands this year marks an innovation in the offer of the Brooklands Founders' Gold Cup as the prize for the Lightning Short Handicap. As this is to be an annual award, the race earns a distinction which both competitors and the public will appreciate. To have won the Founders' Gold Cup at Brooklands may, one day, confer as much prestige on a car in the motor world as a horse now earns on the Turf by winning the Gold Vase at Ascot. The cup is a handsome trophy copied from a rare Irish drinking vessel of the seventeenth century.

The entries for the meeting number 79, and are well up to the average, one of the most satisfactory features being the way in which the Small Car Handicap has filled, there being no fewer than ten entries. The tiny four-cylinder Austin makes its initial appearance in this race, and it will be watched with great interest.

Other new-comers to the track are a Nazarro, a four-cylinder Ballot entered by Malcolm Campbell, and a huge aero-engined Fiat which D. Eldridge is preparing, and which promises terrific speeds. To match this monster are the Wolseley-Viper, with Pop Cory at the wheel; the Leyland, in the hands of Captain Howey; Count Zborowski's wonderful Ballot; and the well known Isotta-Fraschini. Cook has a new Vauxhall—Rouge et Noir II—which appears to be as fast as Park's famous red racer; Clement will bring out his single-seater Bentley; and the Bugatti and Salmson will be seen for the first time at an important meeting in short distance races. Joyce is running in two events with his 100 m.p.h. A.C., Captain Douglas has entered an Aston Martin, and Brocklebank's Peugeot will be out again to confound both bookmakers and handicappers.

The Easter Meeting is always one of the best fixtures on the Brooklands programme, and with the increased popularity the track is now enjoying there seems every prospect of a record crowd on Easter Monday.

THERE IS A PYRENE APPLIANCE FOR EVERY FIRE RISK

The Conquest FIRE EXTINGUISHER

Manufactured by the Makers of the Pyrene Fire Extinguisher.

For Country House Protection

TO overcome the prevalence of disastrous Country House fires it is essential that efficient fire protection should be maintained on the spot. One of the most dependable and economical means of providing this is to install the Conquest Fire Extinguisher.

This is a two-gallon extinguisher approved by the Fire Offices Committee. Immediately upon being turned upside down it projects a powerful fire quenching jet in any required direction. The Conquest Extinguisher is effective on all ordinary outbreaks of fire, e.g., woodwork, upholstery and soft goods, paper and similar free burning materials. For highly inflammable substances and electricity the Pyrene Extinguisher is recommended.

A Book Worth Writing for.

Illustrations and full descriptions of these and our various other types of fire extinguishers and appliances, together with much useful information on fire prevention and protection, are given in the handbook, "Modern Fire Fighting."

Country House Fire Engineering Service.

This book also outlines our expert fire engineering service for Country Houses. This service includes a free initial fire survey of property and inspection of any existing fire appliances wherever distance from our nearest office permits.

MONEY

MESSRS. HARDENS submit their fortnightly Market Report, as follows:—

The approaching holidays causing a short account, the new Budget looming near, and the uncertainty prevailing in the two most important industries of the day—coal and building—have together caused Markets to quieten down considerably. The marked success of the recent new issues, however, is a good indication that money is available for sound organisations.

Our political information is that the Turkish question will be settled quickly, but due allowance must be made for the Easterner's inherency to bargain. If it were not for Continental selling in our Market, the TURKISH UNIFIED BONDS would be much higher, and we make no apology for again pointing out the possibilities in this Stock.

SOUTHERN RAILWAY DEFERRED STOCK is now 40, but is still a good purchase, whilst the Preferred Ordinary is very well secured as regards Dividends. If CALEDONIAN DEFERRED STOCK is to be paid pro rata in London, Scottish and Midland Ordinary Stock on the Dividend records as in other cases of absorption, we cannot see the justification for the present price. L.

Competition in the Motor world is very fierce, but those who can be patient, will find some Motor Companies' Shares are worth putting away.

Crosses and Winkworth own a group of the finest Mills in Lancashire, and the operations of the Company are in experienced hands, so that the Cumulative Participating Preference Shares can be bought without fear of a serious set-back from the present price of 17/-.

British Cellulose and British Dyes Shares have held their own for several weeks, and we are looking for better prices in the near future.

It is our opinion that Bradford Dyers' Association will have to shoulder a part of the burdens of the wool trade (the Company works on a Commission basis), and, in consequence, it is hardly likely the last Dividend will be maintained

We would again draw attention to Nitrate Shares, as the output figures for the commodity make pleasant reading for Holders; at the moment the Market promises to increase in interest, and we consider that there are excellent opportunities for appreciation and Dividends

BOLIVAR RAILWAY PREFERENCES are very firm at 7/6. The Company will benefit considerably from the recent discoveries in Venezuela, and the shares can be recommended.

MINES.—A purchase of DE BEERS Deferred appears to us fully justified at present. The experience and knowledge of the board of National Mining cause us to recommend the shares (4/9) to any who do not mind the liability of 4/- per share. A big effort will be made this spring to interest the British public in American Mining Companies; there is certain to be some tares with the wheat!

TEA AND RUBBER SHARES.—The market in both classes of shares is quiet and resting at the moment, but present an excellent opportunity for bargains to those who want to sell on a rising market later on. IMPERIAL TEA, KINTYRES, YATADERIAS, GENERAL CEYLONS, POONMUDIS, can be purchased amongst tea shares. BUKIT KAJANGS SINGAPORE UNITED, PIERMAS, MERLIMAUS and CEYLON TIMBER AND RUBBER are amongst the Rubber Shares recommended.

OIL SHARES.—The Shares of the five great controlling companies have remained quiet, but V.O.C.'s have been active, though possibly a set-back may occur. News from Venezuela is absorbing great attention in the States, and many American operators are on the look-out for properties near the projected pipe lines. OMNIUMS have improved on the announcements, and when the general public realise the possibilities the shares will look cheap at 4/6.

Any of the readers of COUNTRY LIFE who are interested in the purchase and sale of Shares of all descriptions are invited to correspond direct with Messrs. Hardens, Ltd.

* Between the time COUNTRY LIFE goes to press and is on sale there may be some alterations in the prices included in the above report.

FROM THE EDITOR'S BOOKSHELF

Vanderdecken, by H. de Vere Stacpoole. (Hutchinson, 7s. 6d.)

IF you belong to that type of person to whom mere words, such as "spars," "rigging," "ratlines," "breakers," "the tumble of the bar," bring a sudden eager beat of the heart as though a fresh stinging wind had blown in your face, you must read Vanderdecken. Mr. de Vere Stacpoole has constructed a clean, brisk, entertaining, entirely improbable yarn, with buried plunder and desperate encounters as its incidents, a gallant little "movie star" as its heroine, and a fine, upstanding, irritating, lovable sailorman as its hero. But the Wear Jack, in which the expedition to capture Vanderdecken, the yacht robber, sets sail, is the most important actor in the story—at least, to me; and after her, the dirty old Heart of Ireland, in which the adventurers return from their eventful journey. S.

Men, Maids and Mustard-Pot, by Gilbert Frankau. (Hutchinson, 7s. 6d.)

WHILE there is nothing in this, Mr. Frankau's first, collection of short stories which is likely to cause one to write indignantly to the editors of any of the recent short-story anthologies for having omitted it, the author must be congratulated on the very fair average of interest which his tales reach. They are essentially magazine stories, of the kind which will pleasantly beguile a tedious half-hour even if they are forgotten as soon as read—and this is rather curious, in view of the fact that throughout the book Mr. Frankau continually scoffs at magazine stories as at something contemptible. For our part, though we admire schools of fiction for which Mr. Frankau, in a challenging preface, expresses derision, and would aspire to be included among the class he describes as "jaded intellectuals," we are willing to admit that, having once embarked upon any of his stories, we always read on with enjoyment to see how they ended. Moreover, he gives such good measure that if, as may happen, the reader is irritated by something pompous and mannered in the style in which any particular story is told, he may pass on to the next, for there are plenty to choose from.

The Best Short Stories of 1922, English. (Cape, 7s. 6d.).

MR. EDWARD J. O'BRIEN AND MR. JOHN COURNOS have undertaken a task of selection at which every informed imagination must stand aghast. When they have studied all the short stories of all the magazines of England for a whole year, can they possibly have enough freshness left to make their awards with any certainty? As might be expected, there are some extraordinarily good stories in their collection: Mr. De La Mare's elusive threatening, compelling, "Seaton's Aunt"; "Major Wilbraham," in which Mr. Hugh Walpole deals extremely well with one of those difficult themes which turn on the appearance of Christ as man among men to-day; "Genius," by Miss Elinor Mordaunt, and some others. Almost all have some outstanding virtue, but there are not many which one would really care to see held up to the world as among the best achievements of English short story writers in a given year. There are only one or two which are not written by authors of some established repute. It is to be hoped that the editors will continue their exhausting labours, but also that they will arrange their fruit under a less ambitious title.

Piccadilly, by Kathleen Coyle. (Cape, 7s. 6d.)

Piccadilly is one of those first novels which seems to prove that every one has the matter of one good book in them and suggests that one is here too low an estimate. It is exceedingly well written, and the men and women in it—particularly Mary Temple, the central figure, as it were, the steady light around which the people of the tale revolve—are extraordinarily alive. It is mainly concerned with a girl, Carinthia, who in the first pages is on the verge of destitution and flutters to Piccadilly, tempted by the solution of her difficulties which it may offer. Fate throws her into the Temple household and she sees the dark trail which Piccadilly and all it connotes leaves behind it. But Miss Coyle's intention has not been to preach conventional morality, but understanding, and she has fully succeeded. One of the most human and sympathetic of books, with the beauty of tears and courage. An occasional vagueness both of word and theme is the only thing which keeps it from being a remarkable novel as well as a remarkable first essay.

Rambles Round the Old Churches of Wirral, by C. W. Budden, M.D. (Liverpool: Edward Howells, Limited, 8s. 6d.)

WIRRAL stands to Liverpool as Surrey to London, save that being a peninsula one would expect it to be something of a backwater, overlooked by the restorer. It is not Dr. Budden's fault if many of the churches have none the less been badly renovated. On the contrary, with his enthusiasm and wide knowledge, he does much towards supplying the interest which, in a too methodically restored church, is apt to escape notice. In two notable instances—Bebington and Shotwick—however, the interior and fittings remain remarkably untouched. In several places the old church plate remains, and in nearly all these are details for the indication of which Dr. Budden deserves the gratitude of all good Liverpudlians who enjoy wandering about Wirral.

SOME BOOKS OF THE DAY.

EASTER, though it is the first out-of-door festival of the year, comes at a time when the weather may give us anything from summerlike sunshine to a snowstorm, and evening light lasts none too long; therefore indoor amusement must be provided, unless the success of the holiday is to be at the mercy of the weather. This is my reason for beginning these notes with the mention of new works of fiction, notably Mr. Joseph Hergesheimer's new novel, The Bright Shawl (Heinemann, 7s. 6d.) in which he goes back to the mood and manner of "The Three Black Pennys." Then there is a new book by Vicente Blasco Ibanez, The Torrent (Fisher Unwin, 7s. 6d.). The many admirers of "Bartimæus" will rejoice in his new book of short stories, Seaways (Cassell, 7s. 6d.). Mr. Ben Ames Williams, whose novels are always well worth reading, is the author of Sangsue (Mills and Boon, 7s. 6d.). Clent's Way (Chapman and Hall, 7s. 6d.) is by C. C. and E. M. Mott, and should not be overlooked by the lover of good fiction. The Factory King (Cape, 7s. 6d.), is by Mr. Norman Porritt, a novel of industrial life in the early days of the nineteenth century, the main facts of which are authenticated by contemporary writings and records of the movement which has gradually ameliorated the lives of working-class people; and a novel with the tantalising title, Ann's An Idiot (Phillip Allan, 7s. 6d.), by Miss Pamela Wynne, has its scene laid chiefly in India, a charming, foolish, lovable little heroine and a happy ending. For those who do not demand that fiction should be new so long as it is good there are Mr. John Murray's latest 2s. reprints of well known novels—Master and Maid, by Mrs. L. Allen Harker; The Great House, by Mr. Stanley J. Weyman; The Firm of Girdlestone, by Sir Arthur Conan Doyle; and The Fourth Dimension, by Mr. Horace Vachell.

Perhaps Mr. H. L. Mencken's In Defence of Women (Cape, 6s.) ought to be included in the list of fiction—as far as I have dipped into its pages I have certainly found a good deal to justify the impression. Women who read it would probably be moved to pray to be saved from their defenders; but, at least, it will stimulate argument.

Newmarket: Its Sport and Personalities (Cassell, 25s.), by Mr. Frank Siltzer, covers its subject from 1600 till to-day, and is delightfully illustrated.

Mr. Arthur Weigall's latest book, The Glory of the Pharaohs (Thornton Butterworth, 15s.), has just reached me. He succeeds in making Egyptology almost light reading, and tells one quantities of the most interesting facts in the least instructive and most amusing manner. From Golden Gate to Golden Sun (Witherby, 15s.) is Mr. Herman Norden's account of journeyings in Siam and Malaya; from the same publisher come The Highlands with Rope and Rucksack (12s. 6d.), by Mr. Ernest A. Baker; and The Badger (8s. 6d.), that last British member of the bear family being exhaustively dealt with by Mr. Mortimer Batten.

The Mind of "The Spectator" under the Editorship of Addison and Steele (Fisher Unwin, 7s. 6d.), a very interesting volume, is from the pen of Canon G. S. Streatfield.

Home Repairs (Sedgwick and Jackson, 2s. 6d.), a most useful little volume, is by Mr. Kenneth Gray; and The Practical Electrician's Pocket Book, 1923 (3s.), is published by Messrs. Rentoul and Company. S.

RESTRAINT IN COLOUR INVITES DARING LINE

THE COUNTRY SUIT PAR EXCELLENCE.

NOTWITHSTANDING the talk, and the actual fact of bright-coloured and many-coloured materials, the general inclination at present is to wear sombre and neutral tones during the day. Ways and means have to be so seriously studied by the haute monde just now that the practicability of a nuance that can be enlivened and varied by different hats, trimmings, handbags, etc., naturally makes a big appeal; and the new fabrics, such as repp cloth, faconné, plain and figured wool marocain, together with moiré and alpaca—yes, that old-time favourite is with us again—are replete with possibilities and freshness of aspect.

In the classic navy, repp cloth is extraordinarily attractive, and a chic little frock of it that is going to be worn at a wedding is fashioned with a moderate umbrella skirt that dips a trifle either side and is mounted on to a longish bodice. At the neck this is scooped out in a shallow round, about which falls a berthe collar of ivory net frilled with narrow Valenciennes lace, the wide volant sleeve being entirely covered on the inside, as far as the eye can see, with similar lace frills. The accompanying small hat is of beige-coloured marocain, embroidered with silks in a self shade and touches of orange and gold, a long swathe of beige tulle coming from the back and being twisted round the throat.

There is, too, a poplin repp, a material that tailors quite beautifully and is especially successful in black, although it is offered in a long range of colours. It is, however, to be noticed that the more sombre the colour the more daring is the line, the waist suggestion in coats still tending to exaggerated length, whereas in dresses it is decidedly higher; but almost invariably, with whichever is selected, there is a certain amount of elaboration displayed in the skirt, these being gauged, pleated or draped at one or both sides, others cut on the cross, that in repose conforms to the decreed slimness.

Flounces, when they are used, are shaped volants for the most part, and are set on in a sloping line, as that is more becoming and less liable to cut up the figure. A black and white patterned foulard, arranged after this manner, represented in every other respect the simplest of chemise frocks, the wide flange sleeves lined with white crêpe de Chine.

It is, of course, absurd to say, with these many varying types of jupes and sleeves and waistline, that the silhouette is the same. There is much significance in several of the large houses sponsoring the modes of the late 'nineties, the skirts inset with small irregular gores and sleeves of the leg-of-mutton type; and, tempered by latter-day discretion and better taste than was the rule then, these models certainly have a claim to be considered.

As I have found occasion to emphasise more than once, the attention accorded sports clothes is excessive. It is a mark of the times, and those who are unfortunate enough to have to spend a Sunday now and again in town are quickly made to realise what a desert it is, practically everybody having departed to play games over the week-end.

Tennis is already in full swing: hard courts—and golf—like the poor, we have always with us. Hence our contribution this week of an ideal golfing costume, a model commandeered at Aquascutum, 100, Regent Street, W. Past masters in the art of all that pertains to superfine tailoring, these people are specialists in sports garments; and this, their "Camber" suit, will be found to realise the highest expectations in the matter of comfort and practicability. It is built of many materials, including Harris and Connemara tweeds, but is particularly desirable for present wear in a Shetland tweed. The actual example sketched is in a pleasant oatmeal mixture, faintly over-checked in Egyptian red, the skirt having a single deep knife kilt down the side front which ensures the most perfect freedom of movement. At the back, the jacket is arranged with a yoke, on to which the lower part is mounted with expanding pleats, the latter automatically falling back into position when the arms are in a normal attitude. The pockets are likewise expanding, leather buttons and belt buckle adding finishing touches of a workmanlike character; and pivot sleeves can, if desired, be introduced into this model.

The moment, too, is equally à propos to draw attention to the firm's "Polotennis" wrap-coat. This roomy, easy, slipped-on affair is a possession no real sportswoman should permit her wardrobe to lack—the more so, as it is not only obtainable in white, but also bright-hued Polo fleeces, which are bound to be popular this season, in view of the decree for gay coats; while for more general wear, such as race meetings, motoring, travelling and the like, the "Frinton" can be heartily recommended—a model that is similarly offered in a variety of the firm's specially woven wool materials. There is always an unmistakable cachet about the Aquascutum garments that renders them especially covetable in the eyes of the well dressed who value perfect cut and finish.

At the Grand Military Meeting at Sandown the other Saturday the race coat was in particular evidence, and appealed as far more in the picture than did the luxurious fur wraps. It was to be remarked, too, how all the notabilities wore tweed suits, or else something especially modish in knitted coats and skirts. The last named, together with knitted frocks, are developing in many new directions. A dress of much distinction was carried out in dark blue, the skirt interwoven—or perhaps one should say interknitted—with Rumanian colours of red, dull gold, green and black; this skirt, moreover, being ingeniously attached slightly full on to a deep band, the upper edge whereof received the loose, easy-fitting bodice that, in its turn, was completed by wide hanging sleeves horizontally striped to match the skirt. The knitted and crochet craze has us so completely in its thrall, it is most necessary to keep an open mind for anything that may chance to come along. L. M. M.

POINTS FOR CONSIDERATION

A BOOK FOR THE NURSERY FOLK.

THE Ronuk Company, Limited, Portslade, Sussex, well known in every household for their excellent polishes and polishing apparatus, have hit on a very pleasant new type of advertising in issuing the "Ronuk Zoo Book." It contains splendid portraits of the animals most dear to the childish heart, beautifully reproduced, with border sketches, which give an idea of the animal's natural home, by Mr. Harry Rowntree. On the opposite pages are rhymes which young naturalists of the nursery will love to learn, and of which this on the rhinoceros is a good example:—

"He is something like a hippo
But taller, and his nose
Has two big horns upon it

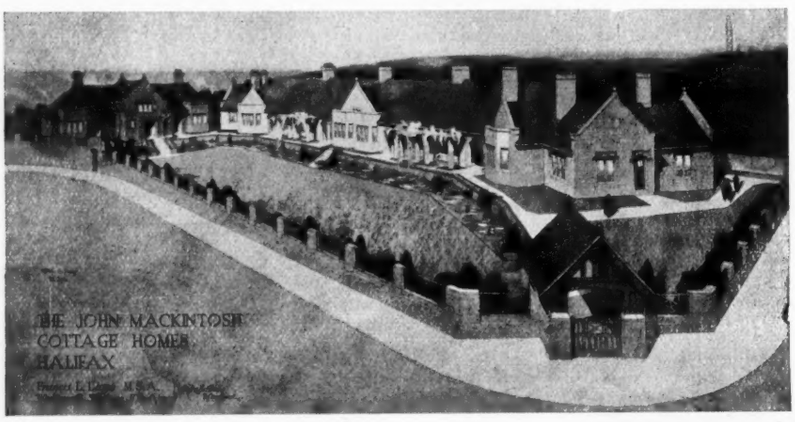
A pleasant fashion of combining natural history knowledge with amusement. The book can be obtained by anyone who sends the coupon contained in the 10d. or larger tins of "Ronuk," or the large label from a bottle of "Ronuk" Furniture Cream, with 1½d. for postage, but the stock of books is limited, and the demand most eager.

THE WAY TO PERFECT TURF.

There has never been a larger public interested in the playing of games than there is to-day, and the provision of perfect turf for these tens of thousands of players is no small problem. The preparation and care of perfect playing turf is a craft, and the number of groundsmen who are fully qualified in this respect has been entirely inadequate to meet the demand for good turf, without which not only is championship form in such games as tennis, cricket and golf an impossibility, but the very enjoyment of playing is very much reduced. Interest in mechanical means of turf care and culture has, therefore, become acute, and as far as speed and economy in mowing are concerned the past two seasons have seen the problem effectively solved by the introduction on a popular scale of motor mowing machines, such as the "Atco," which has repeatedly demonstrated its ability to mow 1,000 square yds. of turf in twenty minutes, at a cost of less than twopence for fuel and oil. Two thousand five hundred of these machines have been sold in the last two seasons. The 1923 models include a new device known as the "Atco" Turf Cultivator, which marks an important phase in the evolution of a higher general standard of turf cultivation. The makers of "Atco" motor mowers, Messrs. Charles H. Pugh, Limited, of Birmingham, have numerous depots all over the country and will arrange for free demonstrations of lawn cultivation and advice and assistance generally for users of "Atco" Motor Mowers.

TURKISH BATHS AT HOME.

A very great many people, particularly those of rheumatic tendencies, would more frequently make use of the Turkish bath were it not that the cost is somewhat prohibitive in London, and that good Turkish baths outside London are few and far between. Those who dislike the idea of the public Turkish bath or find it difficult or uneconomical to make use of one should certainly invest in one of the Folding Cabinets made by Messrs. J. Foot and Son, Limited, of 171, New Bond Street, W. They are much more economical in regular use than a Turkish bath, just as efficacious, and quite safe. Anyone interested in the subject should make a point of securing a pamphlet called "The Bath Book," which Messrs. Foot have just issued.



COTTAGE HOMES AS A MEMORIAL.

Memorials can take divers forms, some of them being purely in the form of monument, while others are adapted to serve an essentially practical purpose. There have been so many of the former class which, as monuments, are unsuccessful, that one is the more inclined to extol the merits of the latter kind. There can be nothing but praise for the cottage homes which are now being built near Halifax by Mrs. John Mackintosh, Sir Harold Mackintosh and Mr. J. D. V. Mackintosh as a memorial to the late Mr. John Mackintosh, the founder of the well known toffee firm. An illustration is here given of the scheme, from which it will be seen what a pleasant haven these cottage homes will be. The architects are Mr. Francis B. Lumb and Mr. William B. Walton.
